PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 101st CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE—Tuesday, January 3, 1989

The third day of January being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of the Congress, the 1st session of the 101st Congress commenced this day at 12 noon.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The Senate was called to order by the Vice President.

PRAYER:

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer.

Let us pray:

* * * For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God.—Romans 13:1.

Almighty God, Lord of Creation, Ruler of the Nations, we thank Thee for Thy presence at this profoundly significant occasion. Help us to take seriously Thy Word, that all authority comes from Thee, and we are accountable to Thee in its exercise. Anoint Thy servants by Thy Holy Spirit with wisdom, strength, courage, and the power to do Thy will on Earth as it is in Heaven. As You have used civil servants for Your purposes throughout the centuries, whether a Pharaoh or a David, may these and all public servants understand that they are ministers of God for good. Help Thy servants to find the delicate balance between representation and leadership. Help them use their power to serve, not to control.

May Your blessing be upon them and their families and all who labor in the United States Senate, that this historic year fulfill Your purpose and bring glory unto Thee.

We pray in His name in whom is all power. Amen.

THE SOUNDS OF SILENCE

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, throughout this season of "Peace on Earth, Good Will Toward Men," we have had to deal with the tragic aftermath of the senseless terrorist bomb attack on Pan American flight 103 which resulted in the deaths of more than 250 innocent civilians.

Mothers with their children, young students returning to their families for the holidays after a semester studying abroad, residents of Lockerbie whose lives were ended or irreparably altered by the cruel vicissitudes of fate—all of these were victims of this heinous act.

There is no justification for the bombing, and it is incomprehensible to me that any individuals, no matter how demented or driven by some sort of misguided fervor, could undertake such an action. No condemnation can be strong enough to express the revulsion we feel about what was done.

Yet, I have been troubled by the relatively mute international reaction to this crime against humanity. Members of the world community have not stepped forward to join in the forceful expressions of outrage by the United States. These "sounds of silence" have, I fear, demonstrated to the perpetrators of this deed and their sponsors that they can engage in such acts of terrorism with minimal fear of retribution or isolation from civilized society.

This reaction, or I should say lack of reaction, is, unfortunately, becoming all too commonplace, with the result a dulling of moral boundaries. International thugs are coming to conclude that they can commit almost any atrocity with little fear of forceful response. The Iraqis found they could use chemical weapons against the Iranians and their own Kurdish citizens with minimal negative reaction. And Libya's Colonel Mu'ammar Qadhafi is now finding a willingness on the part of companies in "nearly a dozen nations, East and West," to help him build what may be the Third World's largest chemical munitions plant, according to a recent statement by Bob Gates, who is leaving his post as Deputy Director of the Central Intelligence Agency to become Brent Scowcroft's Deputy at the National Security Council. Bob Gates' comments have been confirmed by other administration officials and a range of press reports.

These press reports have cited firms in Japan, West Germany, Italy, France, and other nations as giving Libya a capability it lacks on its own. This reminds one of Lenin's statement that the West would provide the rope to hang itself, for Qadhafi has to this point demonstrated no moral qualms about using whatever capabilities he possesses against his neighbors, those in his own country who oppose him, or in support of terrorists who would take actions against innocent citizens of nations he considers his enemy.

The headline in this morning's Washington Post sums up the challenge we are facing. "Bonn rebuffs U.S. on Libyan Factory: 'No Evidence' Germans involved in alleged chemical Arms Plant" it reads, quoting a government spokesman as saying that "the information that we have received from the United States is very vague." This response is a classic case of what lawyers call alternative pleading. On the one hand, one of our companies was not involved. On the other, even if it was, you have not shown the plant is capable of producing chemical weapons.

This willingness to wear moral blinders, whether it be on the part of the companies which provide this expertise or the nations which condone it, is simply unacceptable. And by citing the West Germans I do not mean to suggest that they are alone or that they are displaying a greater willingness than any other nation to look the other way in the face of what is clear evidence of what the Libyans are doing. Japan has shown a similar lack of resolve, and so have the other nations whose firms have provided this assistance.

It should also be noted that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has been curiously silent, both about the terrorist act against Pan American flight 103 and the Libyan chemical buildup. The Soviet leader received positive reviews both in the United States and throughout the world for his speech at the United Nations that he will withdraw 50,000 troops from Europe and reduce Soviet forces by 10 percent. His speech was widely trumpeted as establishing his role as a leader in the effort to achieve peace in a world that has been miniaturized by technology.

But he cannot have it both ways. He cannot promote peace and at the same time turn a blind eye to terrorist actions and those such as the development of a massive Libyan chemical capability which threatens regional stability in the Middle East and risks increasing use of chemical weapons against innocent people. It is imperative that the Soviet Union join with the United States in leading world condemnation of chemical development and chemical use.

Giving M'uammar Qadhafi a chemical capability under the pretext that it is for the production of pharmaceuticals is like giving a flamethrower to a pyromaniac who promises to use it for cooking purposes. None of us should be surprised with the ends to which Mr. Qadhafi will use this capability.

What, then, can and should the United States do? Idle threats are not the answers. We should not come to be regarded as a nation which speaks loudly but carries a small stick. At the same time, we should not act rashly or without full regard for potential consequences of whatever action we might take.

All options, diplomatic, economic, and military, must be fully considered, whether to deal with the perpetrators of the Pan Am bombing or to deal with the Libyan chemical facility. And we have to make clear to sponsors of terrorists such as Libya, Syria, and Iran that we have "zero tolerance" for such sponsorship of these individuals and their actions. Perhaps most important, we must work with our allies and with the Soviets to develop a unified front to deal with this growing problem.

The war against terrorists and outlaw nations is a difficult one and there are no easy solutions. But, as the Reagan administration has demonstrated elsewhere in the international arena, steadfastness and resolve can and do pay dividends and bring results. Let us hope that all nations which have a stake in this war—and that is, in fact, all nations—will join us in showing that resolve.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert a letter to President Reagan signed by a number of our colleagues, a letter signed by Senator KASSEBAUM and myself to the Chemical Warfare Review Commission, and an article that appeared in today's Washington Post written by Meg Greenfield.

There being no objection, the material ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, October 5, 1988.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We very strongly share the concern you expressed in your United Nations speech about the threat of chemical warfare and the erosion of the international regime of restraint on the spread and use of these weapons.

Unless the international community moves swiftly, perhaps the most serious threat we face is that the main lesson from the Iran-Iraq war, and the even more recent Iraqi chemical against a segment of its own population, will be that chemical weapons do work and states that use them can get away with it.

Over the past decade, we have seen both the spread and use of chemical weapons gain increasing momentum. Although we can take action alone in trying to stem this tide by the leverage of our own trade policy, we strongly believe that the most effective restraint is that which can be applied by the international community. This is a problem of international dimension. It is critical that we move as a body of nations to rebuild the barrier to chemical weapons use and reassert the principle that chemical warfare is unacceptable.

We support your call for an international conference to consider actions that will reestablish the moral and legal strictures that have held these weapons in check.

In particular, we would urge that the launching of this conference be a high priority during the remaining months of your administration and that our efforts in organizing this conference focus on mobilizing the international community in three major areas.

First, a top agenda item should be strengthening the existing program of coordinated export constraints, which the nineteen Western industrialized nations have already informally established. We should lead the effort in broadening the lists that the Western industrialized nations use as guidance for export controls to include associated technologies and additional chemicals, as well as broadening the lists of destinations to which exports are controlled. The nineteen Western industrialized countries, which have been meeting since 1984 on these issues, also should formalize their efforts and take immediate action to increase enforcement of the coordinated constraints.

Second, the controls on the spread of chemical weapons can only be effective if they include export controls in the Soviet Union, the Eastern Bloc, and newly industrialized countries. The international conference should focus on incorporating these countries into the Western industrialized nations' efforts in order to achieve enhanced coordination of export controls among as many potential supplier nations as possible.

Third, we believe that the United States should lead the effort in having the United Nations adopt an overall policy of applying international sanctions against any country which violates the Geneva Protocol or other provisions of international law by using chemical weapons. There also must be agreement by members of the United Nations that inspections of suspected uses of chemical weapons by a UN investigating team should be allowed—not only in cases of suspected chemical weapons use during warfare but also when use is suspected under any circumstances.

These issues must be immediately addressed with respect to the use of chemical weapons in the Iran-Iraq War, as well as more broadly in terms of any future use of these weapons.

We believe that agreement on the implementation of international sanctions is essential to enforce the Geneva protocol regime and to demonstrate that the international community will not allow the use of chemical weapons to go unpunished.

The use of chemical weapons is a crime against the international community. It is only through an effective and coordinated response by the international community that we will be able to reverse the erosion of the regime of constraint on the weapons.

Sincerely,

U.S. Senators.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC., December 21, 1988.

JOHN G. KESTER,
Williams & Connolly, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. KESTER: In 1985, you served on the President's Chemical Warfare Review Commission, which examined all aspects of U.S. policy regarding chemical warfare.

The Commission's report, issued in June 1985, was an authoritative study which did much to build a stronger consensus in the Congress for a sensible approach to the difficult issues associated with chemical weapons. We are writing with regard to one aspect of the Commission's study which, unfortunately, received much less attention than it deserved and which has become increasingly important in recent months. In its discussion of chemical weapon proliferation, the Commission stated the following:

"(T)he Commission views proliferation as an extremely serious danger which requires more vigorous action than heretofore. The failure of the United States and allied governments to devise and take strong measures against Iraq and its known suppliers has been an inadequate response."

"The Commission agrees with the observation of French officials that the use of chemical weapons must not be allowed to become 'banal.' There is danger that this is precisely what is happening today. When such gross violations of human decency occur, strong action is called for, even at the expense of short-term economic or diplomatic interests. For example, eight chemical ingredients are known to have almost no use except for manufacture of chemical weapons, and about thirty more have both legitimate and illegitimate uses. International transportation of such substances should be tightly controlled. For the longer term, arms control and tighter restrictions on transfer of technology and hardware, in cooperation with other advanced countries, appear to offer the most promise."

In addition, the Commission's concluding recommendations were the following:

"Response to use of chemical weapons: The Commission recommends that the United States devise and apply strict sanctions and penalties against countries that are using chemical weapons, and their suppliers.

"Exports. The Commission recommends that the United States along with other countries implement an effective ban on exports of materials and equipment likely to be used to manufacture chemical weapons."

In our opinion, these observations and recommendations of the Commission are sound and long-overdue in being fully implemented.

As you are aware, the U.S., in coordination with a group of 18 Western countries, has imposed controls on the export of five chemicals to all destinations and the export of an additional dozen chemicals to Iran, Iraq, and Syria and has established a watch list approach for several dozen other dual-use chemicals.

While we support these measures, which began before the Commission conducted its work, we share the view of the Commission that much more can and must be done. In particular, we concur that export controls must be placed on technology, as well as chemical precursors, when by virtue of its nature and its destination it is likely to be used in the production of chemical weapons. We also concur that, to be effective, such controls need to be implemented in cooperation with other advanced countries. In our view, the countries that need to be included extend beyond the 19 Western nations now involved and should include the Soviet Union, its Eastern European allies, and the newly industrialized countries possessing significant chemical capabilities.

We also strongly endorse the Commission's view that the U.S. should devise a sanctions policy against nations that use chemical weapons in violation of international law. To be most effective, we think such sanctions should also be implemented in cooperation with other countries.

The need to act in this area has been made urgent by the very disturbing events of the last two years. During 1987 and 1988, Iraq greatly intensified its use of chemical weapons in attacks against Iran and its own Kurdish minority. In September, the U.S. government publicly announced that Libya was on the verge of producing chemical weapons at a facility that the Director of Central Intelligence has publicly described as the largest in the world. In 1987, Libya reportedly demonstrated its willingness to conduct chemical warfare by staging a limited chemical attack against Chadian forces.

While, as the Commission observed, the world effectively ignored Iraq's many years of chemical warfare against Iran, Iraq's attacks on its own citizens produced widespread denunciations and focused attention on the growing problem of chemical warfare.

As a result, the President proposed a United Nations-sponsored conference on chemical warfare, which will be held from January 9-11, 1989, in Paris. In our view, this conference represents the best opportunity to reverse the international community's lethargy in the face of some five years of chemical warfare—a lethargy which we believe promoted the intensified spread and use of chemical weapons since 1987.

To help ensure that this opportunity is not lost, we initiated a letter to President Reagan, signed by 64 members of the Senate, urging that the U.S. press three objectives in the context of the conference:

(1) The export control program of the 19 Western nations should be strengthened. The lists used as guides for export controls should be expanded to include appropriate technologies, as well as additional chemicals, and additional countries should be included in the list of proscribed destinations. This effort should be more formalized and immediate action should be taken to increase the enforcement of the coordinated constraints.

(2) Intensified efforts should be made to include the Soviet Union, Eastern European countries, and newly industrialized countries in the export control program.

(3) The U.S. should vigorously press the United Nations to adopt an overall policy of applying international sanctions against any country that wages chemical warfare in violation of international law. There must also be agreement by members of the UN that inspections by a UN investigating team of suspected uses of chemical weapons should be allowed under all circumstances, both when use is alleged in warfare between nations and in cases of alleged internal use by a member nation.

You will note that our recommendations closely parallel those of the Commission. In our view, these actions are necessary if the integrity of the Geneva Protocol is to be restored, the barriers to chemical warfare resurrected, and the growing incentives for chemical proliferation contained. We recognize that pursuing such actions could at times be in conflict with other U.S. interests. We are convinced, however, that the Commission was correct in its conclusion that in the face of chemical warfare, "strong action is called for, even at the expense of short-term economic or diplomatic interests."

Unfortunately, we have not been encouraged by the response we have received to date from executive branch officials regarding the implementation of any of these recommended measures. We believe that you and the distinguished individuals who served with you on the Chemical Warfare Review Commission could perform a significant service by publicly addressing these urgent issues. This could, for example, be in the form of a letter reaffirming the Commission's findings and recommendations cited above and endorsing the substance of the Senate proposal we have described. In our view, it would be most helpful if this were to be done in the next few weeks, prior to the Paris conference.

We hope that you will give this suggestion careful consideration.

With best wishes, we are

Sincerely,

NANCY LANDON KASSEBAUM,
U.S. Senator.
WILLIAM S. COHEN,
U.S. Senator.

LEAVE THE TABOO ALONE

(By Meg Greenfield)

Happy New Year. Sweep up the confetti. The first item on your 1989 agenda will be chemical warfare—the growing danger and how, if at all, to contain it. The only good news about the complications involved is that they will certainly haul a nation of incorrigible political yammerers back from the simplifications and sillinesses of a year-long political campaign and compel us all to get serious. An added benefit might be an end to 1988's premier fatuity, the one about peace "breaking out" around the world. Peace—meaning, these days, new cease-fire-type agreements and arrangements between combatants or would-be combatants, a sort of mutual standing down at least for now—does not "break out." It generally is very hard and painstakingly won. And nowhere will the need for the requisite ingenuity, audacity and commitment be more apparent than in the attempt to bring chemical warfare—both the reality and the potential—under control.

CIA Director William Webster a couple of months ago publicly outlined the dimensions of the problem. The stuff is relatively cheap, easy to produce and deliver, and difficult to detect in its manufacture phase. Webster says that "more than 20 countries may be developing it;" Libya, alas, is a leader in the field with "the largest known chemical-weapons facility in the Third World." This is the one you have lately heard administration mutterings about destroying before it is fully operational. In addition to the growth-industry aspects of the problem there is the enormously consequential fact that the taboo on its use has increasingly been broken in recent years, most notably in the Iran-Iraq war: both sides used chemicals, but Iraq's use was more thoroughgoing and had much to do with the ayatollah's backing off. Iraq paid little for its actions; the outcry was minimal, even pro forma, if not downright phony.

This brings you to the basic paradox in dealing with chemical war: we must use every rational means at our disposal to maintain what is an essentially irrational, but invaluable, taboo against its use. In calling this taboo "irrational" I don't mean to say it is either wrong or unreasonable—on the contrary. What I mean is that the gut feeling that has led to the characterization of chemical (and biological) agents as particularly horrible and intolerable is subject to assault by cold, abstract, detached and profoundly stupid logic. I have heard the arguments made; they hold that these weapons are "no worse" than other weapons of mass destruction, in fact probably produce a "cleaner," less agonizing death, are no sneakier in manner of delivery than the unseen firing of lethal explosives from vast distances away, are more economical, less destructive of buildings, historic artifacts and so on. To all of which the answer must be, in my considered, rational opinion, a loud, unconditional, ear-piercing shriek of "No!"

The fact is that there is no socially beneficial policy, idea or practice, starting with the good works that may flow from religious belief, that is not vulnerable to this kind of reductive reasoning. I say leave the taboo alone. It represents a kind of instinctive wisdom that is superior in every respect to the kind of argument used to undermine it. It is true that people have not always rejected this general kind of combat: an objective of good old siege warfare was to induce disease among the resisting town's population, and it was not unheard of to catapult corpses of your own fallen soldiers over the wall to hasten along the process. But at least in this century a widespread sensibility has developed that favors outlawing chemical and biological agents in warfare, and partial as it may be in relation to all the kinds of weapons available, and imperfect as it may be in observance, it is surely worth preserving. Who cares if the logic on which the moral revulsion rests may be shown to be as intellectually rickety as that which, for a time, held the English longbow to be an ungentlemanly breach of warrior ethics or the American Indians' ambush-style warfare an unconscionably dirty trick? The impulse to outlaw this diabolical stuff is right.

This tells you why it was so unforgivable that, in their relief at seeing the Iraq-Iran hostilities ended, countries around the world countenanced the decisive use of chemical agents in that war. It doesn't tell you, though, how to address the far harder questions of putting these weapons outside the reach of would-be users and creating inhibiting penalties for even thinking about their use.

The Reagan and Bush administrations will have to do that. But others should at least master the outline of the dilemmas. There is first the current argument over whether possession of these weapons can be safely outlawed by treaty at all or whether prohibitions can only be put on their use, owing to the ease with which their manufacture can be concealed. There will very soon also be the question of whether it is legitimate to use force (i.e., other lethal weapons) to destroy a facility such as that outside Tripoli, which holds so much terrible promise. There will also be, eventually, surely, given the ease and economy of space with which this material can be transported, questions of imposing security procedures whose intrusiveness will make current airlines and checkpoint practices look positively convenient.

And there already is the depressing question of whether there is anything too reckless for businesses around the world, particularly in Japan, East Europe and the West, to transact with the likes of Gadhafi. When the subject was the proliferation of nuclear bomb-making materials and technologies, our rectitudinous allies—and some of our own government apologists for the practice—argued movingly, through their sea of deposit slips, that it was much better that we should sell whoever it was these goods than that someone who didn't care how they used them did, etc. etc. We shall no doubt hear that baloney again. The imposition of trade restrictions in this field, like the imposition of moral sanctions—the sustained howl that was never heard over the use of chemical agents in the gulf war—is something that too readily falls prey to a misguided, short-term, cynical idea of political or national self-interest. Judge the conference on chemical warfare that begins this week and the actions of our own government on how forcefully and unambiguously they reject all forms of this easy virtue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BREAUX). The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

PARDONS FOR NORTH AND POINDEXTER

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I have an article that says all I need to say, so I will be very brief. It is by William Rusher in the November 29, 1988 edition of the Conservative Advocate. The title is "Give North and Poindexter Pardons."

When I called Mr. Rusher to obtain this article, I found out he was in the hospital undergoing multiple bypass surgery. We wish him a speedy recovery, and we now know that even conservatives such as William Rusher do have hearts.

I think Mr. Rusher makes some excellent points about what is happening with respect to the extravagant waste of the taxpayers' money in trying to prosecute Mr. North and Mr. Poindexter. It is a problem that is behind us now and it should go with this administration. I believe it would be appropriate if President Reagan would resolve this issue by pardoning them before he leaves office.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the fine article by William Rusher.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Conservative Advocate, Nov. 29, 1988]

GIVE NORTH AND POINDEXTER PARDONS

(By William A. Rusher)

No one who knows President Reagan doubts for a moment that the question of whether, and when, to pardon Oliver North and John Poindexter is very much on his mind just now.

Clearly Mr. Reagan had hoped that the trial might end, with acquittals of North and Poindexter, before he leaves office on Jan. 20, and thus spare him any need to pardon them. But it now appears that the trial will only be getting under way in January, so if the two men are by any chance convicted the question of whether to pardon them will end up in the lap of President Bush.

Of course, Mr. Reagan may already have obtained Mr. Bush's assurance that, in that case, pardons will be forthcoming. But in all fairness, the whole problem is an outgrowth of Mr. Reagan's administration, not Mr. Bush's. There will undoubtedly be loud protests from the usual sources if these two defendants are pardoned, and Mr. Reagan would seem both morally obliged and, as the outgoing president, far better positioned to take the heat.

On its merits, the case of pardons seems to me overwhelming.

(N.B.: I am talking here only of North and Poindexter. Their co-defendants Richard Secord and Albert Hakim may be equally innocent, but their involvement in the affair was essentially that of businessmen. As such, they were entitled to make a legitimate profit, but the case against them amounts to a charge that they made much more. Whether this is true will presumably come out in their trials, and should determine the desirability of pardon for them.)

The Iran/contra imbroglio essentially broke down into two separate episodes: the sale of arms to Iran, and the furnishing of military aid to the Nicaraguan contras—events related only by the fact that profits from the former paid for the latter.

President Reagan was fully aware of the arms sale, and whatever North and Poindexter had to do with it was done on his authority, no criticism can attach to them.

The provision of military aid to the contras was something else again: Congress, under at least some of the successive Boland amendments, and prohibited this—though it signally failed to provide any criminal penalty for violating the prohibition.

The gaudy congressional inquiry into the whole affair was essentially an effort by the congressional Democrats to prove that Mr. Reagan knew about the aid—something he consistently and strenuously denied. There is no doubt whatever that impeachment would have followed if such proof had been found, but the air went out of the investigation's tires when none was.

But, in that case, what was all the hullabaloo about? Somebody had to walk the plan for something, if the whole congressional inquiry wasn't to be exposed as the political snipe hunt it was.

So special prosecutor Lawrence Walsh, with 25 lawyers to help him and $8 million to spend, stitched together a theory that, while what North and Poindexter did without Mr. Reagan's knowledge might not be illegal (or at any rate might entail no penalty), they could be prosecuted under the general anti-conspiracy statutes for conspiring to do it.

Such chop-logic is grotesque. North and Poindexter are being destroyed simply to conceal the fact that Sen. Daniel Inouye's extravaganza was a brazen partisan waste of the taxpayers' money. Both men acted from the highest motives, in an area of law made incoherent by Congress' on-again-off-again enactments. Neither made a dime on the deal. (Anyone who complains because North accepted a security fence for his family's house, at a time when they were the special target of Arab terrorists, must be a cynic on anabolic steroids.)

Mr. Reagan should pardon North and Poindexter on Christmas Eve, and then have them both over for turkey.

AIDS UPDATE

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, according to the December 26, 1988 AIDS Weekly Surveillance Report, 82,406 Americans have been diagnosed with AIDS; 46,134 Americans have died from AIDS; and 36,272 Americans are currently living with AIDS.

Mr. President, since my last statement on October 20, 6,969 more Americans have developed AIDS and 3,702 Americans have died from this horrible disease.

Mr. President, last May, I began submitting these statistics for the RECORD on a regular basis because I believe they serve as a reminder that the suffering and the dying from AIDS continues unabated. I will be continuing that practice in this Congress, beginning today.

The statistics regarding AIDS demonstrate clearly the gravity of this epidemic. If current trends continue, in the next few months, the number of Americans diagnosed with AIDS will reach 100,000 and the number of AIDS-related deaths will soon surpass that from the Vietnam war.

We made progress last year in enacting sound policies to accelerate research on, expand health-care services for, and prevent further spread of this epidemic. And, scientists are continuing to make strides in finding better treatments and vaccines.

But that was only a beginning. We must not let up at this critical juncture. Much still remains to be done in order to stop this tragedy from claiming more lives.

Mr. President, the National Organizations Responding to AIDS, a coalition of nearly 50 diverse organizations, including the AIDS Action Council, the Child Welfare League, and the National Association of Counties, developed a white paper that outlined a set of recommendations regarding AIDS policy for the transition team of President-elect BUSH. I believe these recommendations represent a good blueprint for legislative and administrative activities and goals for the coming year. I would like to share the document, entitled "A Call for Executive Action" with my colleagues, and ask unanimous that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the document was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS RESPONDING TO AIDS,

November 23, 1988.

President-elect GEORGE H. BUSH,
1825 Connecticut Avenue, NW, Washington, DC.

DEAR PRESIDENT-ELECT BUSH: AIDS is the greatest public health challenge our nation will face with you during your term as Chief Executive. With 75,000 Americans already diagnosed, over half dead, and as many as 1.5 million infected, we collectively face an epidemic of staggering proportions.

The enclosed document represents the collaborative efforts of the undersigned member agencies of the National Organizations Responding to AIDS. It contains recommendations for action we hope will become the building blocks of your Administration's fight against AIDS.

The needs are numerous and diverse. They include increased and coordinated research, expanded targeted education and counseling efforts, and incremental steps toward health care improvements. They demand support for the community-based efforts that have provided the underpinnings to this nation's response to the epidemic.

Meeting these needs aggressively and effectively will require significantly more resources according to both the President's Commission and the Institute of Medicine. Priorities will have to be set within the context of the numerous domestic challenges your Administration will face.

This document begins the process of setting some of those priorities. Our organizations stand available to continue that effort with you. Your leadership is the key to how effectively we move forward in the battle against AIDS.

Sincerely,

The undersigned member organizations of NORA.

A CALL FOR EXECUTIVE ACTION

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE TRANSITION TEAM

AIDS promises to be the major public health challenge of the new Administration. In every area, AIDS is calling into question the standard approaches to public health in America. It poses a threat—to lives and to our health care systems. It also offers an opportunity to restructure our nation's health care delivery so that it is responsive to the research, prevention, care and financing needs of all health care emergencies and catastrophic illnesses, not just AIDS. The dimensions of the epidemic demand that we move beyond our current band-aid approach and embrace a more cost-effective, coordinated and comprehensive response to AIDS.

The new Administration is fortunate in that blueprints for the nation's fight against AIDS are available in some detail, thanks to the work of the Presidential Commission on the HIV Epidemic, through its report released in June 1988; the recommendations of the National Academy of Sciences' Institute of Medicine in its two reports entitled "Confronting AIDS"; and the reports issued by the Surgeon General. The general structure they outline, and the significantly greater resources they call for, provide targeted benchmarks for future efforts.

This paper outlines several key policy initiatives we believe should be part of the new Administration's agenda in developing a programmatic response to AIDS and in crafting a fiscal year 1990 federal budget. These proposals are presented in the context of the major issues affecting the epidemic, with a particular focus on the primary federal agencies involved. However, three critical, overarching issues can only be addressed at the highest levels of the Administration and are worthy of special attention.

There is a pressing need for aggressive leadership from the President in our nation's battle against AIDS. Americans must see in their Chief Executive an example of compassion and dedication to eradicating this public health menace through education, prevention and research activities that can be a model in the public and private sectors.

Anti-discrimination assurances must be strengthened in all aspects of public and private sector employment, housing, public accommodations and health care services. The existing protections in federally funded programs under Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act must be aggressively enforced. Expansion of these protections into the private sector, whether HIV specific, or ideally, within the context of the Americans with Disabilities Act, must be the primary AIDS legislative goal of the new Administration. This is also the principal recommendation of the Presidential Commission.

Our health care delivery system is already under severe strain in numerous jurisdictions most heavily affected by AIDS. Reforms in health care financing and assistance to those systems are critical. We must improve access to care, not only for the growing numbers of men, women, and children with HIV related disease, but also for all who are catastrophically ill or inadequately served by our existing public and private health care delivery systems.

RESEARCH

It is impossible to consider AIDS research outside the context of general support for basic biomedical research. While we may still have far to go in solving the AIDS puzzle, we would never have accomplished so much without the foundation provided by basic biomedical research. Behavioral research has also been of considerable importance in an epidemic which presently can only be slowed through behavioral change.

Although increases in AIDS research funding have been generously provided over the last several years, other research programs have suffered. For example, the incidence of sexually transmitted disease is at a record high for heterosexuals, yet research in this area has not received increased resources. This hurts the AIDS effort and jeopardizes our ability to respond to future crises.

Support for research requires a commitment to rebuilding our nation's research infrastructure; assuring that increased numbers of researchers and clinicians are trained in infectious diseases and other branches of biomedical and behavioral research, and making government and academic clinical or research positions competitive with positions in the private sector.

While much has been learned about the AIDS virus in the past seven years, much remains to be discovered. Indeed, that very progress is justification for an accelerated and expanded effort in the future. In order to continue the progress, we must go back to the bench and expand AIDS research initiatives in the laboratory. This requires increased support for investigator initiated research. Unless the next Administration continues to show a strong commitment to providing resources for AIDS research and related fields, investigator interest in AIDS may well decline.

National Institutes of Health

The National Institutes of Health have provided the national, and much of the international, leadership in AIDS research efforts. Virtually every institute and center at the NIH is involved in AIDS and HIV-related activities. The rapid expansion of their AIDS activities has strained the entire research support structure. As a result, one of the critical needs facing NIH is increased personnel and expanded facilities. While funding for AIDS research has grown dramatically, staff and facility requirements have not kept pace, making less effective the commitment of funds. This has delayed the NIH's ability to respond to new developments in the research field. For example, the NIH AIDS coordinator testified that trials for promising therapies were delayed for lack of staff. Every day of delay in finding an effective treatment or cure is not only paid in lives, but in health care dollars many times over the cost of increased staffing or other research efforts.

The next Administration must also foster an awareness that speedy review of promising therapies and rapid implementation of trials of those therapies—with specific timetables for reporting results, whether positive or negative—are legitimate expectations of a nation deeply concerned about AIDS. Even allowing for scarce resources, there have been considerable delays in moving some therapies into trials.

One method for achieving a more rapid response to the changing research picture is to use community-based clinical trials to complement the standard trials now under way through the more traditional AIDS Clinical Trial Groups. Community-based trials offer the chance to expand the demographic and geographic reach of trials and to provide all persons with AIDS and HIV infection the hope which attends to participation in clinical trials. This is particularly important and urgently needed within communities where there is a high incidence of low-income and pediatric cases of HIV infection and AIDS. Initial effect at community-based trials are being organized by NIH; the next Administration must assure that this approach receives top priority and adequate funding and staff. A related need is the development of an AIDS treatment registry, making information regarding trials and experimental therapies available to care providers and patients. Indeed, if this approach proves successful in AIDS research, we may well see it applied to other disease, where access to experimental treatments is often too limited.

Access to timely and accurate AIDS information by the federal government, the general public and health care professionals is of paramount importance to the management of this epidemic. Yet this remains one of the most elusive components of our national response to this epidemic. Information concerning AIDS research is currently being maintained on literally dozens of computers with essentially incompatible databases. There are no plans to integrate existing data into a composite reservoir which could be accessible for the purposes intended. In addition, recent legislation has mandated a number of information systems, but it has not endorsed a coordinated or centralized component to these systems. The next Administration must ensure that the information dissemination and referral models which have been identified in recent legislation are implemented effectively. In order to do so, the benefits of establishing an information resource management office should be considered.

The NIH have made substantial progress in the development of new drug therapies that are effective in assisting persons with AIDS and HIV infection. Along with drug development, the U.S. Government must exercise available authorities to allow consumers increased access to such drugs. Furthermore, the Secretary of HHS must exercise full authority to prohibit private pharmaceutical firms from either restricting access to such drugs or pricing therapies beyond the reach of consumers who are in need.

Food and Drug Administration

As the FDA has become more deeply involved in reviewing promising treatments for AIDS and HIV infection, the facility and staff requirements of the agency have also grown. The FDA has recently made a commitment to becoming more involved in working cooperatively with drug companies to expedite the testing and review of HIV-related treatments. Yet, this cannot be accomplished without increased staff and facilities for this initiative and FDA programs in general. For instance, the FDA has 900 fewer FTE positions today than it did 10 years ago. In addition, the recently added FTE's for AIDS research are forced to work out of their home 60% of the time because there is not enough FDA office space to accommodate them. The infrastructure needs which must be addressed include: personnel; additional Senior Executive Service positions; establishment of a Senior Biomedical Scientists Program; creation of a scientific advisors program; medical review training programs; state-of-the-art communications systems; equipment and instrumentation of research facilities; and office space.

A major policy area that deserves close and immediate scrutiny is how to achieve earlier access to promising therapies for persons with life-threatening illnesses such as AIDS without compromising the integrity of the FDA's licensing process. FDA policy must reflect the distinction between the short-term need to provide access to promising therapies and the long-term need to gather comprehensive data prior to licensing. Changes in the treatment IND process announced over a year ago were designed to allow significantly earlier access to drugs for persons with life-threatening conditions who might benefit from a therapy that had not yet passed all the hurdles in the licensing process. That system, for various reasons, has not worked as promised or intended. It should be reviewed, and new attempts made to meet that important goal of assuring access to promising drugs to those whose life-expectancy cannot sustain the lengthy drug licensing process.

The FDA must also address the lack of information about clinical trials and the interim results of those trials. Persons with life-threatening illnesses need access to such information so they can make informed choices about treatments and trials available to them.

Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration

Increased behavioral and social science research under the auspices of ADAMHA directed toward assessing successful models of prevention and education are necessary in order to better understand effective methods of altering sexual behavior and practices. This information could be used to benefit the efforts of public health officials and community professionals working in prevention programs.

As we have more experience with HIV infection, the mental health and counseling needs of individuals with HIV infection are becoming more apparent. The long-term counseling needs of persons with HIV infection must be made a higher priority of ADAMHA, as must research into behavioral change and research into the neurological damage produced by HIV. In addition, ADAMHA must continue to give its attention to research and services for those suffering from AIDS-related dementia, a problem gaining greater recognition. Mental health practitioners and private researchers are reporting alarming increases in the numbers of suicides related to HIV infection and the increasing treatment needs of persons suffering from HIV-related depression. The relationship between alcohol abuse and HIV infection and other dual diagnoses must also be given greater attention.

PREVENTION

Every HIV infection prevented saves us the human and financial costs associated with AIDS. Prevention is still dependent on behavior change. The great strides made within the gay community serve as a model for specialized and targeted education and must be continued. Likewise, the need to reinforce education within the general population, as well as within communities at greater risk, remains an important priority. The success of all these efforts is dependent on freedom from restrictions on content and methodology that interfere with the ability to communicate the prevention message to targeted audiences.

Centers for Disease Control

The Centers for Disease Control is responsible, above all, for AIDS prevention efforts. Greater resources must be committed to populations that have yet to receive adequate attention and access to prevention efforts. These populations include: minorities, adolescents, women, school-aged children, people with disabilities, IV drug users and their sexual partners, prisoners, and other institutionalized populations. Of particular importance are groups that may fall between the gaps of established community organizations and services. Included among these groups are gay minorities, runaway youth and homeless individuals. The diversity of populations at risk with different, but not necessarily mutually exclusive needs, must be recognized.

Targeted funding for education programs should be directed to those community-based organizations and local governments with the most experience in reaching targeted populations. Distribution of funding should not reflect simply absolute percentages of AIDS cases, but the per capita incidence in smaller cities and rural communities. All prevention programs should include evaluation components so that successful strategies can be replicated.

The continuing rise in sexually transmitted diseases is indication of an ever-growing pool of individuals also at risk for contracting HIV infection. Combatting the growing rate of STDs is an investment in preventing HIV infection as well. More resources must be devoted in this direction.

Resources for HIV testing and concomitant counseling must continue to expand. With the increasing likelihood of an early medical intervention for those infected with HIV, the demand for early detection will grow exponentially. The infrastructure must be in place to assure that testing and counseling services meet the CDC's own quality standards. Strong confidentiality and anti-discrimination assurances are a necessary part of an effective counseling and testing program.

Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration

One of the key recommendations of the Presidential Commission is that treatment for IV drug users be available on demand. This is a laudable goal, made more imperative in the context of an epidemic that is being exacerbated by IV drug abuse. No where is the evidence of this more tragic and apparent than in the increasing number of children born to drug abusing mothers who are HIV infected. We must immediately begin to build an infrastructure that will make treatment on demand possible, while also building prevention and education programs for those at risk. Care for IVDUs with HIV-related disease must be integrated with treatment for drug use itself. Central to a successful campaign against drug use and addiction is a reexamination of treating drug users strictly from a criminal perspective. Approaching this issue as a social and medical problem might accelerate progress in this area.

HEALTH CARE

The growing caseload of AIDS patients and persons with HIV infection challenges our nation's health care delivery system. The continuum of services needed encompass prevention, education, counseling, legal services, case management, social services, home care, housing, hospice, addiction treatment, and health care.

Health Resources Services Administration

The Health Resources Services Administration has assumed much of the leadership in establishing alternative care models for those effected by the epidemic. HRSA must have the resources to work with state and local governments as well as with private health care agencies to create community care initiatives which provide the continuum of care needed by those with HIV-related illnesses. Data from the Bank of America has found case management and the continuum of care model, used in their study, to be an increasingly effective tool in improving access to care and decreasing the costs associated with care. In fact, for every $1.00 spent in costs to support a case manager, $19.00 was saved in service delivery. To date, our nation's response to the needs of patients has been dependent on the medical model for services including costly hospitalizations.

In addition, training professionals to work effectively with communities that may be at risk is a critical component to the provision of AIDS education. Training for health care and social service workers, along with teachers, law enforcement officers and others is a cost-effective way of reaching members of the general community as well as the targeted populations these professionals work with. Moreover, HRSA must increase its training and education for care providers, with a recognition that "care provider" encompasses a multidisciplinary range of professionals and volunteers beyond physicians and nurses.

As continuums of care are established, the support needs of those caring for people with AIDS must also be recognized. Counseling, mental health, respite and other support services are necessary for the care partners and families of people who are infected with HIV. Including these individuals into the care and treatment continuum is important for sustained and competent care.

AZT Funding

The federal AZT payment program, administered by HRSA, was adopted as a stopgap measure to assure that no person would be denied access to this life-saving therapy because they were ineligible for Medicaid or private benefits and could not afford to pay for AZT out of pocket. This special AZT funding is set to expire in the first three months of the new Administration. In developing a permanent approach to the problem, we must reassess the cost sharing responsibilities within and between the public and private sectors. The issue of financing AZT will become even more compelling as the universe of individuals advised to take AZT grows. If it is recommended for persons who are asymptomatic but are HIV positive, the current system's standard response of forcing an individual to "spend down" assets in order to become eligible for Medicaid becomes even more unconscionable and fiscally unwise.

Care Financing

The health care needs of people with HIV infection place enormous burdens on the U.S. health care system. The service needs of people with AIDS and HIV are adding seriously to the problems created by an estimated 37 million uninsured and 53 million underinsured Americans. The nation has been struggling, without success, to meet the competing needs for improvements in both primary care and long term care.

AZT costs are just one of many care financing challenges posed by AIDS. Other therapies are insufficiently covered by either public or private insurance programs; attendant and other in-home care supports are frequently not recognized as reimbursable items or are capped in such a way as to render them useless; hospice services are both inadequately financed and insufficiently available; and testing is used to deny individuals insurance. Access to primary health care is curtailed or denied because of employment interruptions or pre-existing condition exclusions, such as positive HIV tests. The Executive Branch must provide leadership in the assessment and implementation of incremental improvements in health care financing options for people with AIDS and HIV infection if we are to be able to sustain people in the least restrictive environment possible; assure them quality of care; and curtail serious increases in uncompensated care costs, particularly in high-incidence jurisdictions.

Priorities should include: sustaining individuals on employment-related health insurance as long as possible by working toward the elimination of pre-existing condition exclusions and constructing subsidy programs, perhaps through Medicaid, that would assure ongoing payment of private insurance premiums through the post-employment extension period allowed under COBRA; reducing the waiting period for Medicare eligibility to 18 months so that it becomes available to an individual at the point at which his or her private insurance is no longer available through the COBRA extension; and expanding the scope of services covered by Medicaid, to include home and community-based care and other approaches that might better and more efficiently meet the needs of persons with AIDS.

HCFA should immediately begin a series of technical assistance workshops and seminars for state Medicaid commissioners and advocates on current uses of the Medicaid system. Included in these sessions should be assessments of usable AIDS-related services under each state's plan, and assistance in completing time consuming waiver applications in order to increase the number of community-based services available to Medicaid recipients. Where states are applying for 2176 waivers for the express purpose of providing care for individuals affected by HIV, an expedited review and approval process should be established.

As Medicaid related assistance is reviewed, under-reimbursement should be particularly targeted. The Federal government should require states to reasonably reimburse providers for costs of persons with HIV infection. This is particularly critical in states with restrictive Medicaid eligibility and reimbursement rates. At the present time, under-reimbursement averages about 30%, but this varies widely by state and geographic region.

Ultimately, a broader based reform of the health care financing system for AIDS—and for catastrophic illnesses generally—is needed. We recommend the immediate convening of a panel to study the relevant federal, state, public and private responsibilities in providing and financing HIV care—a panel that should be given a short lead time with instructions to report on specific proposals.

In the interim, we would recommend consideration of impact aid for communities hardest hit by the AIDS epidemic. Since AIDS disproportionately affects uninsured populations, the growth in AIDS cases is adversely affecting the ability of public hospitals in particular to continue providing adequate care for their patients. By overwhelming the system with AIDS patients, the care afforded other poor people at public hospitals—institutions that are often the primary care facilities for millions of poor and uninsured Americans—will be diminished, thus compounding the health care problems experienced by poorer Americans in general. Financial assistance to those high incidence communities with public systems overwhelmed by AIDS might help keep the system running until a longer term solution can be found.

Social Security Administration

Methods for improving access to Social Security disability benefits for persons with HIV-related disease must be examined. Persons with AIDS are given presumptive disability status, although some individuals have continued to experience approval delays. Persons with other forms of HIV-related disease, even when equally disabled, are not granted such status and often face inordinate delays in receiving disability eligibility—delays that often exceed life expectancy. Immediately, the new Administration must examine the disparities in the implementation of current regulations and seek to either clarify and correct these problems or promulgate new regulations.

DISCRIMINATION

Civil Rights Enforcement and Legal Services

As noted in the introduction, federal legislation assuring civil rights protections for people with AIDS and HIV is of primary importance as this Administration begins its efforts to combat the epidemic. Moreover, existing protections must be properly implemented and enforced. The Offices for Civil Rights in the various agencies (Health and Human Services, Education, HUD, etc.) have, until very recently, labored under confused guidance regarding interpretation of Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act and have been lax in their enforcement of Section 504. These offices have now been given a clear and appropriate mandate through the Justice Department's September 1988 legal memo that people with AIDS and HIV infection are covered under Section 504. The offices must now establish, as a high priority, active enforcement of Section 504 to redress violations.

All efforts in combating AIDS—from prevention and participation in research to provision of health care and services to those with AIDS—are deeply affected by the adequacy of antidiscrimination protections. Whether HIV specific, or, ideally, in the context of the Americans with Disabilities Act, these protections are supported throughout the public health, medical, and research communities, all of which see their absence as hindering efforts to develop effective prevention and control programs. Antidiscrimination protections are not only fair and just, they are good public health.

Persons with HIV infection and AIDS face discrimination and denial of services in a variety of settings. While AIDS service providers, disability rights groups, and civil rights groups have all attempted to provide some legal assistance, there is an inadequate patchwork of legal services seeking to defend the rights and access to care of persons with HIV, their caretakers, and others who may face discrimination. The federal government should assist in expanding and funding the availability of these services, in training lawyers and affected individuals in the law, and in educating the general public to assure that existing laws are adhered to by all concerned.

TRIBUTE TO BILL NICHOLS

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I was deeply saddened by the death on December 13, 1988, of my close friend and colleague from Sylacauga, AL, Representative BILL NICHOLS. His death came as a great shock to me and left the entire State of Alabama with an enormous sense of loss. In my judgment, Representative NICHOLS embodied the ideal Congressman striving to make America a better place to live while never forgetting his roots nor the good people of Alabama who elected him.

BILL NICHOLS was an incredible talented and intelligent man. He was also the type of man who would go out of his way to help another person and to help his country. He succeeded fabulously at everything he attempted and has left behind a legacy which would make any man proud.

In all that he did, BILL NICHOLS made a difference. He graduated from Auburn University in 1939 and earned a master's degree from there in 1941. In addition to his studies BILL devoted himself to athletics, serving as captain of the Auburn football team. Like many others his age, BILL went to fight for his country in World War II. BILL fought with honor and distinction, earning both the Bronze Star and the Purple Heart. His Purple Heart was awarded after he stepped on a land mine during the Battle of Hurtgen Forest in Germany. BILL underwent 19 operations but eventually lost his leg. To some the loss of a leg would have been devastating, but BILL viewed it as an inconvenience which he promptly overcame. As in the rest of his life, BILL absorbed the minor set-backs and continued with his life, serving as president of both the Parker Fertilizer Co. and the Parker Gin Co. in Sylacauga, AL.

BILL NICHOLS' most important work began when he was elected in 1966 to represent eastern Alabama's Third Congressional District. He was an effective, caring, and immensely popular Congressman. This past October he was elected to his 12th consecutive term and was diligently working at his desk at 7:30 a.m. during recess when he suffered a heart attack.

Perhaps it is fitting that BILL was working when he died. He had a great passion for helping people, especially his eastern Alabama constituents. Somehow BILL always seemed above politics. He had an incredible rapport with the common man and was able to help people without regard to reelection. Of course, it was this type of compassion and caring which made BILL NICHOLS more than a politician—he was a statesman in the most noble sense of the word.

As you can tell by his war record, BILL felt strongly about the defense of this Nation. Throughout his time in Congress, BILL's influence on the House Armed Services Committee increased and eventually he was picked to head the Investigations Subcommittee. It is perhaps from this subcommittee that BILL had the most impact on legislation. In 1986, Congress passed the Goldwater-Nichols Defense Reorganization Act which helped eliminate waste by restructuring the command hierarchies of the Pentagon and the military services. He also played a large role in the investigations which revealed questionable military expenditures like $400 Navy hammers and $5,000 Air Force coffee pots. NICHOLS amended a military spending bill to eliminate such wasteful practices.

BILL NICHOLS was not flashy, yet he was wonderfully effective. He worried less about perceptions than about results. He was unpretentious and driven. He was honest with himself and honest with others. It is this straightforwardness and caring which endeared him to so many.

BILL NICHOLS was an outstanding Congressman whose efforts will be missed by Alabama and by the entire Nation. BILL's death was a great blow to thousands of people. I have lost a close and devoted friend and I will miss him greatly.

MILITARY BASE CLOSING COMMISSION

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am in the process of carefully reviewing the recommendations of the Special Commission on Base Closings.

I strongly supported the establishment of this Commission because I believe that it is essential for us to reduce unnecessary expenditures. We simply must reduce Federal spending on redundant programs and the military budget is justifiably a prime target for beginning the process of what must be shared sacrifice. All of us in Congress recognize that there are some inadequate and antiquated military bases which have been funded far beyond their useful lifetime because of home State pressures and legislative action. This is particularly true of older Air Force bases which cannot accommodate today's aircraft and modern training requirements. Closing some of these facilities may also help to reduce air traffic congestion in selected metropolitan areas.

In general, I applaud the intentions of the Base Commission to help reduce the deficit and to save taxpayer money for other defense and social programs. I am concerned that a substantial share of the proposed cuts are targeted on California facilities—but I recognize that California has a disproportionately large share of defense installations. Some California bases will benefit if the Commission's recommendations are carried out. They are Beale and March Air Force bases, as well as the Long Beach and San Diego Naval stations, which will gain jobs. I am particularly concerned about the proposal to close Letterman Hospital and transfer all 6th Army Headquarters personnel from the Presidio to other States. As for the decision not to homeport the USS Missouri in San Francisco, I recognize the cost savings that will be realized by curtailing the strategic homeporting program; but as Senator from California I have urged that the entire Missouri battlegroup be stationed somewhere in California.

I will be consulting closely with other members of the California delegation in the days ahead to review the recommendations of the Commission. I recognize that with the leadership of the House and Senate Armed Services Committees lined up in support of the entire package, it is not expected that Congress would break open this package of recommendations for consideration on an individual basis. It is possible, however, that there may be debate over funding necessary for accomplishing the transfers of personnel and hardware.

MARTIN LUTHER KING DAY—1989

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, on January 16 we will once again celebrate Dr. Martin Luther King's birthday. It is a time to reflect on his contributions to our society, to measure how true we have been to his legacy, and to commit ourselves to renewing our resolve to meet the challenges he laid out for us.

Dr. King's commitment to equality and justice for all Americans is well known. His dedication to raising the consciousness of America and the world to the plight of the poor, the homeless, the hungry, and the downtrodden is reknowned. His leadership of nonviolent protest to compel change in our society is now recognized as one of the greatest movements in American history. His "I Have a Dream" speech still presents moral challenges to our Nation that have yet to be fulfilled.

In thinking of Dr. King's contributions to our society, the moments we most often recall are the 1956 Montgomery bus boycott, the 1964 march on Washington, and the 1968 Memphis sanitation worker's strike that immediately preceded his assassination. But, his legacy has lived on in the increased participation of black Americans in the political process and the hope and inspiration he still provides for many black Americans—young and old.

Dr. King fought for voting rights for black Americans and, long after it was due, enshrined that right in our Constitution and our laws. His leadership lives on in city halls, county councils, and a myriad of political institutions where blacks now hold office and a leadership role in our communities and political system. Their leadership, along with the Federal candidacies of many black leaders, and Jesse Jackson's Presidential candidacy, have instilled pride and hope in many Americans who had never felt they could be active participants in the political process. This leadership at every level of the political system has motivated many minorities, poor people, and others to become involved in the political process at the National, State, and local levels.

Mr. President, in New Jersey blacks have assumed important leadership roles in both political parties. And our State is the richer for it. In November, New Jersey made history by electing our first black Representative to Congress—DONALD PAYNE will take office as Congressman from the 10th Congressional District. Many voters from the 10th Congressional District developed an appreciation for the importance of voting as a result of Martin Luther King's struggles against the widespread disenfranchisement of blacks and poor people throughout the United States.

Mr. President, Dr. King is a hero of mine. During his struggles, I was greatly influenced by his words and deeds. From him I learned that being right is not always popular, that being committed to equality is not a fad, and that being attacked and maligned is sometimes the highest praise one can receive.

I was proud to support legislation to make Dr. King's birthday a National holiday. Proud to have sponsored the law that named our new Federal building in Newark after Dr. King. These symbols are important, for they show that we, as a nation, still hold high Martin Luther King, Jr.'s dreams.

Mr. President, as we observe the Federal holiday commemorating the birthday of Martin Luther King, we must reaffirm our commitment to continuing his work. For until there is opportunity and justice for all Americans the dream will not be fully realized.

RABBINICAL COLLEGE OF AMERICA HONORS IKE HELLER

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to pay tribute to Ike Heller, recipient of an honorary doctoral degree from the Rabbinical College of America of Morristown, NJ. A noted industrialist, Mr. Heller has contributed to his community for many years and his philanthropy has made a lasting impact on the lives of many.

Ike Heller is an American success story. In an empty store in Brooklyn he founded, with very little funds, what would become a multimillon dollar business known as the Remco Toy Co. Spurred by this success, he went on to found Heller Construction Co. He pioneered the idea of "vest pocket distribution parks." Built on small amounts of land with direct access to railroad lines, they were highly successful. Today Heller Construction Co. operates and owns more than 9 million square feet of industrial and warehouse space, located in nine States. He has gained well-deserved praise for leading the way for the provision of day care facilities by corporations.

A private man, Ike has shunned publicity for his good deeds. This remarkable man has contributed over the years to community and civic endeavors and to the field of education. As the recepient of an honorary doctoral degree from the Rabbinical College of America, his devotion to Judaism and its ideals are recognized.

He is most deserving of this high honor. I congratulate him and extend my warmest wishes for continued success and happiness.

TRIBUTE TO RUSS BERRIE

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to pay tribute to Russ Berrie, recipient of the Community Achievement Award of the northern New Jersey chapter of the American ORT Federation. A noted businessman, Mr.

Berrie has contributed to his community over the years and his philanthropy has made a lasting impact on the lives of many.

Russ Berrie is an American success story. As a youngster he started a one-man newspaper delivery service and his entrepreneurial expertise continues today. After completing military service and attending classes at New York University and the University of Florida, he became a salesman for a toy manufacturer and later a manufacturer's rep. In 1963, operating out of his garage, he founded his own company. Today, Russ Berrie and Co., Inc., manufacturers over 7,500 products including children's toys, stuffed animals and other gift products and is known worldwide, with 5 subsidiaries and over 2,500 employees.

This remarkable man has contributed over the years to community and civic endeavors and to the field of education. He has donated thousands of dollars' worth of merchandise to needy children and funds to programs aiding senior citizens, the handicapped and disadvantaged.

Mr. Berrie has been lauded by many organizations; including the "Man of the Year" Award by the Catholic Community Services, "Entrepreneur of the Year" by Venture magazine/Arthur Young, and UNICO National's "Antonio R. Rizzuto" Award. A founding member and director of the Boys Town of Jerusalem Foundation of America, he received the Gate of Jerusalem Award in 1987.

Chosen by his service to the community and as a leader in business, Russ Berrie is most deserving of the American ORT Federation's Community Achievement Award. ORT the Organization for Rehabilitation Through Training has a rich 109-year history. Active in 35 countries, it is devoted to the vocational training and economic reconstruction throughout the world, and educated over 200,000 students in vocational teaching fields. I congratulate Russ as a recipient of this high honor, and extend my warmest wishes for continued success and happiness.

CHICO MENDES

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise today to express the deep sorrow of all who care about the preservation of the world's rain forests—and indeed all who are concerned with the health of our planet—at the assassination of Francisco Mendes Filho of Brazil.

"Chico" Mendes was a leader in the movement to preserve Brazil's fragile rain forests from devastation by ranchers.

On the night of December 22, 1988, Chico Mendes was murdered by gunmen in the remote Brazilian province of Acre.

The ranching interests have been implicated in the murder, and seven suspects have already been arrested.

Mr. President, it is appropriate for us in this Chamber to ask why Chico Mendes was murdered. As policymakers for the world's greatest Nation, we are responsible at least in part for the state of the world's environment. It cannot fail to be a matter of concern to us that a man who did much to advance the cause of planetary health has been brutally slain.

Chico Mendes died because he stood up for the long-term interest of environmentally sustainable economic growth—against the short-term folly of rapid despoliation followed by equally rapid descent back into the gloom of poverty.

I knew Chico Mendes. He was a friend of mine. He was a valuable ally in the struggle to focus America's attention on the importance of the environmental struggle.

He knew—and proved with both his life of 44 years and his death last month—that environmental concern is not a luxury of wealthy dilettantes but a crucial investment in the future of all the world's citizens.

The fate of the Brazilian rainforests—the cause for which he gave his life—is our cause too. Not out of sentimentality, but out of true sentiment as well as enlightened self-interest. America cannot be true to itself if it sanctions the destruction of the world's common heritage; and America cannot long continue to prosper economically if it ignores the destruction of the very forests that make our air breathable.

Chico Mendes understood that we're all in this together. We can ignore the devastation of distant rainforests with as little impunity as the steering wheel can ignore four flat tires. Because they perform a vital service to the whole global environment—in decreasing the pollution level of our atmosphere—they cannot properly be called simply "Brazilian rainforests."

The fact is, we need them and we use them—so they're our rainforests too.

We have a duty to keep them healthy—especially those of us who help make environmental policy here in the U.S. Senate.

Francisco Mendes Filho will live on—because many will continue his fight. Let us join them, and use the assassination of Chico Mendes not purely as a cause of mourning but as an opportunity to rededicate ourselves to the values he fought and died for.

Chico Mendes was on our side even when many Americans weren't—back when the environment's problems weren't on the cover of Time magazine. It would be a worse offense even than his murder if we were to turn our backs after the great example he gave us.

REMARKS OF SENATOR BOB DOLE; REAGAN FAREWELL DINNER

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, Senator BOB DOLE recently paid glowing tribute at the Reagan farewell dinner held on November 29, 1988, at the Library of Congress.

I ask unanimous consent that his remarks be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF SENATOR BOB DOLE: REAGAN FAREWELL DINNER

Mr. President, we are gathered together tonight at one of those moments people remember forever. It is a punctuation point in our lives. It is an end to a chapter in our history. It is a time when we realize that we are all older, if not wiser. A time when we understand once again that many are called but few answer.

It is a time when we look ahead and see that thanks to you, our party still holds the destiny of the country in its hands. But as we gather here together, we also look back on the great triumphs you led us to in the past. We count ourselves fortunate to have served with you at a great moment in America's history, Mr. President, a moment that the men and women of this country will remember with special respect as long as they care about their country.

Many of us in this room had served in Congress before you came to Washington, and we all sensed the change immediately. We all knew that this was a different kind of President. A President who knew that there was a difference between leadership and mere office holding. A President who came to power in a dark time but knew that it was really morning in America. A President who, with his charming, courageous and insightful first lady, would give this town a touch of class. We knew immediately that this was not an ordinary man, but rather a man who had a rendezvous with destiny and would not shrink from that appointment.

It was not an easy course you chose, Mr. President. But you forged ahead. And we were fortunate to be at your side. You conscripted us into your army. You gave the order and up the hill we went, flags flying, swords shining. Following your lead, we made it to the top too, with some legislative achievements that will always stand as landmarks in the years to come.

We passed the tax cut that gave our economy a chance to flourish once again. We rebuilt America's defenses and got this country up off its knees. We are proud to have been your advance guard in these and other accomplishments, Mr. President. We are proud to have been the rough riders of the Reagan revolution.

There were great moments in those first six years when you looked to us, your Republican majority, to move the agenda. There have been great moments since then. But what has endured during both your terms, and will endure as long as any of us have memory, is the special relationship that has always existed between us and you. It is this that we will cherish in the years ahead.

It is the way you bound us to your own destiny and gave us all a shared fate that will lead us always to think of ourselves, in Shakespeare's words, as "we few, we happy few, we band of brothers."

And soon you will leave and we will remain behind. We stay on to do the Nation's work and also to protect your legacy and extend it into the future.

In the days ahead we will always be ready to beat back those who would destroy the great landmarks we have built together. We will always be ready to win one more for the gipper. And we know too that your work is far from finished and that there will be times when we will have to call on you to win one more for us. And that when we do, you will ride down out of the hills again, larger than life, ready to save the day one more time.

And so we say farewell to you, Mr. President. Farewell to our Commander in Chief. Farewell to our leader. Farewell to our friend. We will never forget you and Mrs. Reagan. We will never forget the battles we fought together—the ones we won and the ones we lost, always with honor. We will never forget your generosity in allowing us to enter the history books with you.

As you go you take our appreciation, our admiration and above all our prayers. In the words of that old Irish farewell, "may the road rise to meet you, and may God hold you in the hollow of his hand."

REMARKS OF BARBARA BUSH AT NATIONAL LITERACY HONORS DINNER

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, Mrs. Barbara Bush made a compelling plea to end illiteracy in our Nation at the National Literacy Honors dinner held on November 15, 1988, in Washington.

I ask unanimous consent that her remarks be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MRS. BUSH'S REMARKS AT NATIONAL LITERACY HONORS DINNER, NOVEMBER 15, 1988, WASHINGTON HILTON HOTEL

Mr. President . . . elect, Governors Clinton and Kean, ladies and gentlemen, friends—thank you all for that very warm welcome. Music—Peter Jennings—Pearl Bailey—Dennis Weaver—Loretta Lynn, And thank you, Jim Duffy, for that generous introduction.

I am overwhelmed and it is you who deserve the applause.

You who have worked your hearts out for literacy, who have given so generously of the best you have;

You . . . the 17 "learners of the month," who lived so much of your lives with the courage that comes from carrying a great burden, and who laid down that burden . . . but not the courage . . . when you learned to read.

You are all heroes to me, and you are all shining examples of the most beautiful sentence F. Scott Fitzgerald ever wrote: "The essence of America is a willingness of spirit."

In fact, you are all shining examples of those thousand points of light we have been hearing a lot about lately.

One week ago today one rich chapter of our lives ended and tonight I have been sitting here re-running literacy highlights of the last eight years.

I remember how the fledgling coalition for literacy struggled to get its awareness campaign going. At that time literacy as an issue wasn't a gleam in anybody's eye except Ted Bell's and, of course, the unsung heroes toiling in the field. But with the help of generous people . . . like Harold McGraw and his business council for effective literacy . . . that very loose coalition of different groups, all with their own agendas, stuck together and worked it out, and got that awareness campaign going . . . and kept the 800 number going . . . and set the tone for what came later, including the miracle of "plus."

Now, what earthly reason did the coalition have for cooperating? . . . or ABC or PBS for becoming such historic bedfellows? . . . or educators and volunteers and corporate people and clergymen and bureacrats for joining forces all over this country?

There really is no earthly reason for any of this truly transcendent cooperation . . . except for the greater good of our country and its people. And that is the essence of America . . . an enormous collective willingness of the heart.

There's a true story I'm fond of telling, so many of you may have heard it before. But it seems so fitting for this splendid night.

Several summers ago in Maine, I was planting peonies that a dear friend had given us. The instructions were clear: "Dig a deep bed, plant the roots deep, mulch, and water well. If you do all this, the plants will not bloom the first year, but they will bloom the next . . . and the next . . . and for a hundred years to come." And as I planted I thought to myself, "I am planting for my children . . . and my grandchildren . . . and my great grandchildren."

And that's what it means to work for literacy. We're doing this for our children and our grandchildren and for all the generations of Americans to come.

A little boy in a southern school once asked Nancy Reagan how she liked being married to the President. "Fine," she said, "as long as the President is Ronald Reagan." Well, I also like it fine as long as the President-elect is George Bush, and I can still plant peonies and work for literacy.

Thank you all so very, very much. You have given me a golden evening, and I am deeply grateful.

REMARKS OF ROBERT V. ROYALL, JR., AS AN OVERVIEW OF THE UNITED STATES AND SOUTHEASTERN ECONOMICS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, Mr. Robert Royall, Jr., chairman and CEO of the Citizens and Southern National Bank recently delivered some interesting and inciteful remarks at the 13th annual joint meeting of the Southeast U.S./Japan Association in Charleston, SC, on October 20, 1988.

I ask unanimous consent that these remarks be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OVERVIEW OF THE UNITED STATES AND SOUTHEASTERN ECONOMIES

(By Robert V. Royall, Jr.)

INTRODUCTORY COMMENTS

It is certainly a privilege to address you this morning and a pleasure to welcome you to South Carolina and Charleston—one of America's great historical cities and home of the second largest container port on the east coast of the United States. We are privileged to receive the Japanese flag in our port on a weekly basis—and expect K-lines' vessel, the "Ambassador Bridge," to call our Wando Terminal later this week.

I have been asked to speak for a few minutes on the economic climate in the U.S.—specifically in the Southeast—and on the outlook for Japanese investments in our region.

NATIONAL ECONOMIC TRENDS

First, some background on current economic conditions. The industrialized nations of the world are in the midst of a prolonged economic expansion—including the United States and Japan. While we expect some slowing of our economies in 1989, it is likely that the expansion will continue through 1990, both in the United States and Japan.

Each of you recognizes that our economies are going through structural change. For example, there is clear evidence of a globalization of economies, of investment, and of markets—a globalization that is occurring for many reasons—including further improvement in the economic relationship between our two countries. A continuation of this strong economic relationship is essential for the long-term stability of our global economy. When the two largest free market economies of the world can cooperate, a picture of stability for the rest of the world is generated.

With the globalization process, we find our economies becoming more interdependent. Increased foreign direct investment in the United States is one clear manifestation. Of the 213 billion dollars of foreign capital flowing into the United States last year, 12% was in the form of direct investment. More important, that foreign direct investment has experienced a growing rate—last year's 40.6 billion dollars was 62% higher than in 1986 and 114% higher than in 1985. The weaker dollar and a continued emphasis on open trade encourage that direct investment. Yet foreign firms are being joined by American firms in investing in the U.S. The U.S. Commerce Department indicates U.S. manufactures intend to increase their own spending on plant and equipment by 12.5% in real terms in 1989—the largest increase in four years. This investment is a result of the intrinsic strength of the American economy and proximity to growth markets.

Although Great Britain and the Netherlands are the largest direct foreign investors in the United States, with 28% and 21%, Japan has moved from 6% of the total in 1980 to 12% today. The Japanese propensity to save, Japanese firms' ability to finance expansion with internally-generated capital, and the reduced price of American assets as a result of the increased value of the yen combine to encourage that investment. Japan ranks first in direct investment in the U.S. with the number of investing companies—accounting for more than ⅓ of all companies making direct investments last year.

Let's turn to the reverse situation. U.S. direct investment in Japan is also increasing—with companies such as Schick, Polaroid, Coca-Cola, Johnson and Johnson, and IBM experiencing market share growth in Japan. In terms of exports, Japan is the #2 export market for the United States—and is the primary export market for U.S. agricultural products, where we represent ⅓ of Japanese imports. Manufactured goods exported to Japan have increased in recent years, especially in relation to exports elsewhere in the world.

The net result, as reflected in the trade picture between our two countries, reflects a sign of encouragement, with a slight decrease in August from one year ago. However, the overall surplus picture for the fiscal year ending in March, 1989, will likely show little change from the previous year at $94 billion, half of which is with the United States. Obviously, a favorable trend is needed in terms of this imbalance. A free flow between American and Japanese markets is critical if we are to meet the challenges posed by a Common European market in 1992 and a Pacific market in the 21st century.

SOUTHEAST ECONOMIC TRENDS

These investment trends highlight increased globalization, with investments occurring daily between our two countries. Let's look, however, at globalization in a new way. It is generally well known that the United States and Japan have the largest economies in the world.

Perhaps less well known is that today, we are all sitting in the fifth largest country in the world—known as the Southeast United States. Expressed in another way, if the seven-state Southeastern region were a nation, we would rank #5 in the world for our gross national product—exceeded only by the U.S., Japan, West Germany, and France.

In GNP terms, the Southeast has an economic production of over 586 billion dollars—accounting for over 14% of the total U.S. output. The Southeast has also enjoyed rapid gains in output growth—between 1970 and 1986, real gross state product, or GSP, expanded 94%—nearly double that of the U.S. at 49%. Also significant is that this growth in output occurred as a result of increased employment and increased productivity—a 1.3% growth in productivity for the region each year, compared to 1% for the nation.

This growth in the Southeast is not surprising—for business opportunity and the Southeast are synonymous. Growth in industry and population have propelled the Southeast to this premier spot in the U.S. economy. For example:

Over 27% of the total U.S. population growth occurred in the Southeast during the past 10 years—making us the fastest growing market in the nation. The seven-state region grew by an average of 1,835 people each day—from 1977 through 1986. More important, through the year 2000, the Southeast is projected to account for ½ of the nation's growth.

The Southeast's growth and diversification have attracted domestic investment—but it has also attracted more than its share of international investment. Forty percent of the nation's new and expanded foreign facilities were announced in the Southeast last year.

Japanese investment in the Southeast has been especially strong.

(1) 452 firms have invested nearly $5 billion in the region and employed over 37,000 people, with 84% of this employment in manufacturing.

(2) Georgia leads the region with approximately 52% of all Japanese companies and 33% of the employees.

(3) Tennessee leads in investment with 30% of the Southeast total.

(4) And my state of South Carolina recorded a phenomenal 400% increase from 1986 to 1987.

The Southeast Japanese partnership is most successful. While the numbers are strong, we see an equally dynamic change in the nature of Japanese economic activity.

First, a change in the types of goods produced, with more high tech items now in production.

Second, a substantial increase in local content ratios—that is, the percentage of American-made components used in production. The decline in the U.S. dollar relative to the yen has been a major catalyst in integrating Japanese production more fully into the local market. The Japanese External Trade Association (JETRO) indicates a majority of Japanese manufacturers in the U.S. purchase more than 50% of their components locally.

Third, increased research and development is being conducted in the U.S. by Japanese firms—a result of the need for local product development.

Fourth, joint ventures between U.S. and Japanese firms are occurring more frequently—a fifth of all Japanese joint ventures are with the U.S. These cooperative arrangements are especially common in the high tech sectors, with companies like Hitachi and Sperry forming an agreement and Tokyo Electric and Digital Equipment Corporation jointly developing a point-of-sale system for supermarkets.

Fifth, is the re-investment of Japanese earnings in the U.S. in the form of start-ups, mergers and acquisitions, joint ventures, and expansions. Acquisitions in the U.S. more than doubled last year to a record 5.9 billion dollars—from 2.7 billion dollars in 1986.

Finally, the critical placement of production facilities where market demand exists, with less emphasis on year-to-year fluctuations in currency valuations. For example, Honda's more to the Southeast is based on the market potential. Matching the fastest growing region of the world with Japanese production and investment is an example of "international interdependence" at its best.

THE OUTLOOK

This morning, I have attempted to outline a picture of improving relations between our two countries in terms of investment, of globalization of investment opportunity, where country borders become as obsolete as state lines. As the world's fifth largest nation, the Southeast has benefitted and will continue to benefit from foreign investment—as will those Japanese firms which choose to locate or expand in this great region.

As a growth market, we clearly recognize the necessity to further enhance and leverage our opportunities by further improving our business climate. All of the Southeastern states are represented in Inc. Magazine's top 20 states for business climate in their 1988 survey. And each has implemented a variety of public programs to directly foster economic development—from tax incentives, to special training programs, to development of improved infrastructures so vital for a healthy business environment.

Three key areas deserve special mention:

(1) Capital fuels the economic development process and is essential for a region's growth and development. It is now well-known that of the top 10 banks in the world ranked by assets, seven are Japanese, and only one (Citicorp) is from the U.S. As recently noted by stock analysts, it would take 9 Citicorps to equal the Sumitomo Bank in market valuation. There is a clear linkage between the strength of these institutions and the Japanese economic position within the international economy.

The Southeast is also experiencing a renaissance of its banking industry, primarily as a result of interstate banking, which occurred through the leadership of our Southeastern states in 1985. This reciprocal arrangement between Southeastern states enables bank holding companies to cross state lines, thus forming super-regional banks. Today, the Fifth Federal Reserve District, which covers our Southeastern states, ranks #2 in the nation for market capitalization of its banks, only exceeded by New York. It is interesting to note that 6 of the top 10 earners in the banking industry are located in the Southeast. These banks concentrate on the Southeast, providing the critical capital for the nation's fastest growing region.

(2) Japan and the Southeast have another mutual interest—the development of our human capital. Virtually all of the Southeastern states have special programs directed at educating our citizens—South Carolina has the Education Improvement Act designed to improve primary and secondary education, while a recent initiative, known as the "Cutting Edge", is focused on the improvement of higher education and technical programs. Further, virtually every Southeastern state has programs for the illiteracy problem and re-training as needed for the existing work force. There is no doubt that the quality of our human capital is critical to our region's future success.

(3) Access to international markets. Finally, I would be remiss if I passed an opportunity to discuss the region's international access—Atlanta's Hartsfield International Airport and the region's many other airports form one such link. We are also developing another critical international resource, our ports system, which includes the Port of Charleston, now serving the world's top four shipping lines as a load center—and the ports of Savannah, Norfolk, and Jacksonville, with each providing a complete intermodal transportation network.

The Southeast has taken—and will continue to take—steps to open its doors even wider to international investment. We look to Japan to continue in this direction as well. Recent actions are positive—such as Japan's announcement to further open its government bond market, the second largest market in the world, to foreign underwriters.

The botton line is clear—the relationships developed through the Southeast U.S./Japan Association have created substantial results. The Southeast will continue to be a major haven for investment for Japanese companies due to the efforts of many of you here today. The Association has served in many ways to bridge not only the physical trade barriers between our two countries, but the psychological ones as well. Harmonious business and social relationships are as important to you as they are to us—and we are both proud of our records of development.

We look forward to a continuing strong partnership between the world's two leading free markets.

PROGRESS OF JUSTICE: DEDICATION OF ERNEST F. HOLLINGS JUDICIAL CENTER

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, Senator ERNEST HOLLINGS, Chief Justice William Rehnquist, Rev. Dr. Edward Counts of St. John's Lutheran Church in Charleston, SC, and Gov. Carroll Campbell made statements marking the progress of justice since our Nation's founding at the dedication of the Ernest F. Hollings Judicial Center in Charleston held on November 11, 1988.

I ask unanimous consent that their remarks be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHIEF JUSTICE REHNQUIST

Distinguished platform guests, ladies and gentlemen, it's a great pleasure to be with you today on the occasion of the dedication of the Hollings Judicial Center in Charleston. I had the pleasure of visiting my good friend Clement Haynsworth in Greenville some years ago but this is my first trip to the Low Country. I know from history about Francis Marion, the Swamp Fox, from literature about Rhett Butler, now from Senator Thurmond about Southern oratory. It's a great treat to be on the scene of their exploits, I'm looking forward to a tour of Fort Sumter and some other sightseeing while I'm here. I think there's a certain historical irony to the fact that this afternoon I will be touring Fort Sumter and exactly a week from tomorrow, I will be riding in a parade at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania to commemorate the 125th anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address. But it is surely a sign of how far we have come from the dark and bloody days of that conflict that the irony is only historical. I didn't have to come to South Carolina, however, to learn about South Carolinians who have made contributions to the American legal system. In the Supreme Court building where I work, there are busts in our great hall of the 15 Chief Justices who have preceded me in that position. One of them is of John Rutledge of South Carolina. In the building there are also portraits of each of the 104 Associate Justices who have served on the Court and one of them is of James F. Byrnes of South Carolina. John Rutledge served as a South Carolina delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1787 and he was one of President George Washington's original six appointees to the Supreme Court in 1789. He resigned after only two years in the position but three years later Washington nominated him to be Chief Justice when John Jay resigned from that position. Rutledge, unfortunately, had made a speech denouncing the Jay Treaty and the Senate consisting mostly of Federalists who favored the treaty refused to confirm him. But since he did serve as Chief Justice under an interim appointment, his bust is there in the great hall along with those of 14 other Chief Justices. A century and a half later, President Franklin Roosevelt appointed another South Carolinian, Senator James F. Byrnes, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. He resigned after only a year's service at the importuning of President Roosevelt who wished Byrnes to be his right-hand man in the effort to mobilize the United States for its role in the Second World War. Perhaps we may deduce from the very short tenures of Justice Rutledge and Justice Byrnes either that service on the Supreme Court of the United States is not particularly congenial to South Carolinians or else that they much prefer Charleston to Washington—perhaps both! Most Americans view the Supreme Court of the United States as a distant body sitting in faraway Washington and their actual contacts with the American justice system are on a much more immediate level. The courtrooms and chambers of the Federal District judges which will be housed in the Hollings Judicial Center are much closer to the average man and woman than is the Supreme Court in Washington. Indeed, the cornerstone of the American system of justice is surely in the trial courts, state and Federal, in which witnesses testify and juries deliberate. Our American system of justice is far from perfect. All of you have heard and perhaps experienced complaints about delay and expense in our system of justice but when we think that after all, it is a substitute for physical combat of some sort, our goal should be constructive criticism to improve our system of justice. We can't do without it. The Hollings Judicial Center will be a real and immediate symbol of the American justice system to the people of South Carolina, far more real and far more immediate than any far-away court in Washington.

I first became acquanited with Fritz Hollings almost twenty years ago when I was serving as an Assistant Attorney General in the Justice Department and was working for the Administration to secure the confirmation by the Senate of another great South Carolina jurist, Clement F. Haynsworth, as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. I remember walking back to his office with Senator Hollings after a long and somewhat discouraging day on the Hill and being buoyed up by his firm determination to leave no stone unturned in this effort. Fritz Hollings was one of those who had suggested Judge Haynsworth to the President as a candidate for the high court and he worked diligently in the unsuccessful battle for confirmation in the Senate. Before being elected to the United States Senate, Fritz Hollings was, as you all know, Governor of this state. He was Governor during the troubled time of school integration following the Supreme Court decision in the case of Brown vs. Board of Education in 1954. In January 1963, as Governor Hollings approached the end of his term, he decided to pave the way for the peaceful integration of Harvey Gantt into Clemson University which occurred shortly after he left office. In his Farewell Address as Governor, he told his fellow South Carolinians what may of them may not have wanted to hear, that all of the efforts to resist the 1954 decision had failed, that South Carolina must now move forward with dignity and within the framework of laws to accept that decision. South Carolina had to make clear, he said, that its choice was a government of laws rather than a government of men. The failure to clear the hurdle of racial integration, he cautioned, would do South Carolinians irreparable harm. In more recent years, Senator Hollings has served as the Chairman of the Senate Subcommittee which reviews budget requests of the Supreme Court and other Federal courts. While no one will ever accuse Fritz of being an easy touch for public money, he has consistently treated us fairly and has acted in a manner which reflects the sensitive appreciation of the needs of the Federal judicial system. And while the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act has made life financially more difficult for those on the government payroll, including those in the judicial branch, it was undoubtedly a major effort to try to get a handle on the tremendously difficult problems of the huge Federal budget deficit.

Fritz Hollings is a great South Carolinian, indeed he is a great American, who has contributed mightly to the American legal tradition. Many years ago, Daniel Webster said that justice is the great interest of men on earth. I cannot think of a better tribute to Fritz Hollings than the dedication of this temple of justice in his honor today. Thank you.

JUDGE BLATT

Mr. Chief Justice, for the City of Charleston and for the State of South Carolina and particularly for the Federal judiciary, we are deeply grateful for you being here today to make this such a momentous occassion.

I guess because all of us here today are his dear friends and we love him so much, we've saved what might be called the best for the last. Fritz Hollings has given all of his adult life to the service of the people of South Carolina and he has done it with dignity and he has done it with honor and has exhibited character and integrity. He has handled himself in such a manner that every friend has been proud of what he has done in his various public offices. When we started this building, Fritz never asked us why we wanted something, he only asked us what we wanted and he set about to get what we wanted. I can think of no more deserving tribute possible than having this building given his name. I certainly, as I know Falcon and Weston and all of the judiciary who will work in that building, will work in it with great pride. In that building too as you'll see when you go in it, some of Fritz' friends commissioned an artist, Robert Bruce Williams, to paint his portrait, it hangs on the courtroom floor of the building and I hope you'll get a chance to see it. It's a super portrait, a super portrait of a super person and I'm just as pleased and happy as I can be to introduce to you our guest of honor today, my friend of almost 50 years, Fritz Hollings.

SENATOR HOLLINGS

I came into my headquarters running for reelection year before last and my Campaign Manager says you're going to have to get on up to Anderson, they're telling a pack of lies about you up there. I said, heck, man, I got to get down to Charleston first where they're telling the truth about me! Now Anderson has been juxtaposed and I'm absolutely delighted. Butler, no honeymoon could be any more pleasurable than to be buried alive like we're doing here today, I can tell you that right now. But we congratulate you on it anyway, very, very much.

Mr. Chief Justice, Governor Campbell, Judge Blatt, Mayor Riley, distinguished members of the judiciary, Mr. Davis, on down the list, most of all, Senator Thurmond. Now, Strom, I learned a lot from you, I learned not only to carve that thing up there but not to try to rename Charleston Harbor! I can tell you now I've always been second (it always worried me, not really) to the senior Senator but I stopped worrying when I heard, Strom that the Father of our Country, George Washington, first in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen, he married a widow, so you can't be first all the time. I can tell you here and now that there's no greater privilege in all sincerity than to serve as the Junior Senator under Strom. He is the most respected on both sides of the aisle. You can tell by his talk here today, he knows how to make friends for this state and he is absolutely convicted and convinced in his belief and strengths of belief. No one works harder at the people's business than Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and, Strom, I can't thank you enough. Butler, over on the House side, I look forward to serving many, many years as the Junior Senator, I hope I never have to come back and appear in this courtroom but I'll be working at it. I can tell you otherwise that Chief Justice Rehnquist brings to mind that historically this is the Speaker's Corner. The Speaker's Corner, if you read Rutledge's history by Barry, you'll find it was here on this corner that he delivered his famous address against the Jay Treaty, looking right over the graveyard here at St. Michael's. That did bring the wrath of Alexander Hamilton and the Federalists and he was not confirmed but he was the second Chief Justice, Acting Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. Now today we have the Chief Justice and rather than bringing wrath, he brings charm, he brings wisdom and he brings friendship. He has been our friend. Bill Rehnquist referred to those stormy days and we did work hard, around the clock, because there is no one more deserved of service on our United States Supreme Court than South Carolina's own Clement Haynsworth. Mr. Chief Justice, I can't thank you enough for being here. We are all really honored at your presence.

With respect to the historic nature, if this was the Speaker's Corner for freedom, the Chief has also brought to mind that it is the law's corner for freedom. Free at last, free at last, thank God almighty, free at last—that was Martin Luther King. Substance of equal justice under law started right here on this corner in that courtroom under Judge Waitus Waring in Brown vs. Bascom and then in his dissenting opinion in Briggs vs. Elliott, that's when I was admitted to practice. I see Judge Matthew Perry. He was leading the way at that time and there's no question in my mind that for modern day history of America, it began not just here at the Four Corners of Law but right here in this judicial center. And we'll always keep in mind the sensitivity and wisdom, too, of Waitus Waring. The fact of the matter is, you can see his house right after this house that's on the corner, he was the most reviled, vilified, despised judge at the time but not with the young lawyers, I'm going back to that 40 years ago. Judge Waring looked out for the young lawyers when we came in that courtroom. We were nervous, we didn't want to be embarrassed in front of our client and he looked out for us. And that brings me informally to the man who really should be honored, our own Judge Solomon Blatt. Sol is not only the lover of the law but he is the lover of the citizen and citizen rights and as a result he has become, no question, the most popular Federal District judge I have known in my forty years of practice here at the Charleston Bar. I know where the money came from, Sol, you're right, we went over, the last act of Jimmy Carter, we took that Treasury, Post Office, Independent Offices appropriation, we walked it over for the six and a half million and he signed it into law. Then later it was a struggle with my former Congressman friend saying he was going to stand on the corner with a shotgun to make sure it didn't go, we had the North Charleston move, we had the misgivings of our preservationists and everything else. But Judge Solomon Blatt led the way, working with Mayor Riley, the preservationists, the civic community and as has been indicated, working on Strom and Butler and myself. That's why we're here today and we'll be forever indebted to him for his leadership and dedication, we don't even include him anymore in the Barnwell Ring, he's in the Charleston Ring, he's taken over down here and, Sol, we are your greatest admirers, we're grateful to you.

I want to thank my wife, my family, my friends, those who contributed to the portrait inside, my friends for their support, Mayor Riley and Governor Campbell for their laudatory remarks.

On an occasion of this kind, I want to express my particular gratitude to the Charleston Bar. You know, as the pen makes its mark on the parchment, it's the hand that guides the pen and if I've made any mark, it's been the hand of the Charleston Bar, the early day of friendships, the sustenance, the strength, the guidance of the lawyers here. You don't find the real truths in a political poll, in fact it was Winston Churchill who said that nothing is more dangerous than to live in the temperamental atmosphere of a Gallup poll constantly feeling one's pulse, taking one's temperature, he said the only safe duty, the only safe course is to try to do what's right and you come to practice here and you'll immediately learn to work and do what's right. Many a time, we've lost a good hunting trip, a good football week-end and otherwise to searching down the witnesses or staying up in that library all Saturday night, all Sunday night trying to get ready for Monday morning. And that habit has put me half-way in comparison to my senior Senator because no one can outwork him. But if I hadn't gained that habit here, I would have never kept up to some extent with Strom, I can tell you that. I can also tell you that you learn the habits of persistence and perseverance. I saw in the newspaper last week that Henry Guy was retiring and Henry said come around and get your papers. To get my papers in Tannery against Knight would take a 2½ ton truck. That rascal motioned me three times before the Magistrates Court, twice before Judge McMillan in Civil and Criminal, twice before Judge Grimball and finally before the State Supreme Court a year and a half later. But we have learned to persist. Like in our textile case where I started back 30 years ago as a witness and your Governor in the International Tariff Commission and we still try that case today. Then the difficult task, of course, of being a counselor. They always have on the letterhead attorney and counselor and that reminds us that sometimes perhaps they don't need a lawyer, they need Dr. Counts there, a minister or some other distinguished clergyman because the simple reason is that the client comes in with venom and wrath, all they need is a lawyer to say we'll file, we'll sue and start the clock running and start charging them. But that might not be the better course, it may be if recoil is going to kill the gun crew, you'd better not fire it. And finally, the conviction and commitment that is so necessary in your cause. You're not going to ever convince the court and the jury unless you are absolutely convinced yourself. I learned that right here at the hands of the members of the Charleston Bar and particularly one of the last cases Falcon and I tried up here. We had prepared for two years to get it to court, we had tried it for two weeks, we were never offered a dime and after the final argument and the jury went out, they offered us a substantial settlement. And came to mind, the famous saying and rule of Thomas Porcher Stoney, "He either fears his fate too much or his dessert is small who fails to put it to the touch and win or lose it all." Morris, you remember that. Falcon and I put it to the touch and we won it all. And I could go to the United States Senate—I could afford it. So the very procedures and the trial work and the habits learned here at the Charleston Bar is the same as in the United States Senate, we have the adversary proceeding, we bring in the best of witnesses, we make the final argument to the jury and even better yet, we go in the jury room and help decide the case. As we present the facts in Washington, we try to change those facts in South Carolina. Known years back as bigoted and backward, lacking of skills, lacking in health care, we have made tremendous advancements in the past several years but we've got a lot of work to do. Mr. Chief Justice, you mentioned Gettysburg and I think of Dwight Eisenhower when he was President of Columbia University. He bought a tract of land at Gettysburg and the neighboring farmer said, "General, why did you buy this farm down here in Gettysburg?" And Dwight Eisenhower said, "All my life I've been wanting to take a piece of ground and return it to God better than I found it." South Carolina has been my life's case and you, my friends and supporters, have been the best support and the best friendship and the best encouragement anyone could ever have. I'll be forever grateful to you. I should acknowledge on occasions like this that I agree absolutely with Senator Thurmond, we have the most outstanding judiciary of any in the 50 states, we are extremely proud of them, we are proud of our community and working together, we'll return South Carolina back to God better than we found it. Thank you very much.

INVOCATION: DEDICATION OF THE ERNEST F. HOLLINGS JUDICIAL CENTER, NOVEMBER 11, 1988, REV. DR. EDWARD L. COUNTS, PASTOR, ST. JOHN'S LUTHERAN CHURCH, CHARLESTON, SC

Eternal Father, God, Sovereign Lord of all creation, We pause at the beginning of this momentous occasion to offer our praise and thanksgiving for the United States of America, for the inalienable rights and freedoms guaranteed under its Constitution, and for the free electoral process that strong, capable, God-fearing persons might be chosen from among the people, by the people, for the people.

And on this Veterans Day, we are reminded that these freedoms and rights, so often taken for granted, are secured and protected at great sacrifice. And we offer our sincere gratitude for the valor and bravery of those men and women who have served in our armed forces in the past and who serve now in the present that this nation might remain the land of the free and the home of the brave.

O Lord God, Ruler of all nations, We ask your most favorable blessings upon the President of the United States and the President-Elect, upon the Congress, upon the Justices of the Supreme Court, upon the Governor of this State, upon the Mayor of this City, and upon all public servants elected and appointed for the benefit of a good and just society.

And as we stand before this magnificent structure, today to be dedicated to the glory of your Name and to the service of liberty and justice for all, we offer our special petition of gratitude and thanksgiving for your servant, Ernest F. Hollings, whose name this judicial center will bear. We thank you for the blessings that his exemplary life and dedicated service have been, and are, to this nation, to this state, to this city, to his family, to his church, and to his friends.

O righteous God of Truth, Grant that within the halls of this Hollings Judicial Center that justice may reign supreme; that offenders may be justly punished; that the innocent may be rightly protected; and defended.

O God of all Wisdom, Yet, even so as we pray, we confess our human limitations and weaknesses, and we acknowledge that our judgment is always imperfect and that you alone sit in judgment to declare what is truly right and just.

And so we pray for all courts of justice and all magistrates in our land. Give to them your spirit of wisdom and understanding that they may perceive the truth and administer the laws impartially as instruments of your Divine Will—until that time shall come—when perfect justice is found as we each one stand before your throne of judgement and grace and before the Supreme Judge, the Son of Righteousness, face to face, in whose Name we pray. Amen.

REMARKS BY GOV. CARROLL A. CAMPBELL, JR., HOLLINGS JUDICIAL CENTER DEDICATION, NOVEMBER 11, 1988

I am pleased to be able to participate in these ceremonies to dedicate this new judicial center to the honor of a great South Carolinian. The fact that there is such a distinguished panel of guests assembled today is an indication of the respect and admiration Fritz Hollings commands.

I have to tell you though that another outstanding South Carolinian has benefitted in an indirect way from this new facility. Judge Blatt spent so much time on airplanes between Charleston and Washington making sure this facility was built that he's earned enough frequent flyer points for a round trip to the moon! Seriously, though, Judge Blatt put a lot of time effort in seeing that this new facility exists for the benefit of all South Carolinians—and we thank you for your work, Judge Blatt.

While this new facility will bear the name of Ernest F. Hollings, it is so named not for any one one single accomplishment he has to his credit, but in recognition of a 40-year record of service to the people of South Carolina. And it is quite fitting that he should be honored here in Charleston, for it is the people of this area who first shared him with the State.

As a young man, Fritz Hollings recognized the importance of defending the rights of the public and thus dedicated himself to the practice of law. Later, as a member of the South Carolina House, as Lieutenant Governor and Governor of South Carolina, and now as United States Senator, his dedication to the rights of every individual involved in our judicial process can be found in the pages of his legislative record.

Just this year, he worked to increase the number of Federal prisons and has earmarked money for a federal minimum security facility to be located in South Carolina. He also worked to earmark money for a death penalty resource center to provide assistance to State prosecutors and attorneys involved in dealth penalty cases.

All South Carolinians can be proud of the work that he did on the recent drug bill. He worked all summer as a member of the democratic working group writing the bill and then, as Chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee, he supported an additional $205 million in funds for increased enforcement of drugs. Along with this funding, 300 new U.S. attorney positions will be created to provide an additional force to prosecute drug cases.

President Grover Cleveland once noted that a truly American sentiment recognizes the dignity of labor and the fact that honor lies in honest toil.

I can think of no finer way to recognize the dignity of Fritz Hollings' labor than by placing his name on the face of this Judicial Center. Just as this Judicial Center now stands as a symbol of fairness and justice in the city of Charleston, Fritz Hollings' name has come to represent fairness and justice to the citizens of South Carolina.

EFFECTS OF PETROLEUM IMPORTS ON NATIONAL SECURITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 5

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to Section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, as amended (19 U.S.C. 1862(c)(2)), I am reporting my determination with respect to the Department of Commerce's investigation into the effect of petroleum imports on national security.

The Department's investigation was in response to a petition filed in December 1987 by the National Energy Security Committee. The Secretary of Commerce has concluded that there has been a substantial improvement in U.S. energy security since the last Section 232 petroleum finding in 1979. However, declining domestic oil production, rising oil imports, and growing Free World dependence on potentially insecure sources of supply raise a number of concerns, including vulnerability to a major supply disruption. The investigation found that the maintenance of U.S. access to sufficient supplies of petroleum is essential to our economic security, foreign policy flexibility, and defense preparedness. Given these factors, the Secretary of Commerce found that petroleum imports threaten to impair the national security.

However, taking into account the Administration's detailed program to improve energy security, transmitted to the Congress on May 6, 1987, the Secretary has recommended that no action to adjust imports under Section 232, such as an oil import fee, be taken because such action would not be cost effective and, in the long run, would impair rather than enhance national security.

I approve the Secretary of Commerce's finding, and based on his recommendation, I determine that no action to adjust oil imports under Section 232 need be taken.

My Administration has done a great deal to build the Nation's foundation for long-term energy security and to strengthen the domestic oil industry. We have decontrolled oil prices and eliminated allocation controls. The Strategic Petroleum Reserve (SPR) contains over 555 million barrels, compared to 108 million barrels 8 years ago. United States imports come from diversified sources, and there have been important developments in conservation and interfuel substitution that contribute significantly to enhancing U.S. energy security. In addition, implementation of the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement will promote increased bilateral energy trade and provide reliable supplies at competitive prices. Today the Nation is far less vulnerable to an oil supply disruption than in 1973 and 1979.

Despite these improvements, important energy security concerns remain. While lower oil prices have provided substantial benefits to the U.S. economy, they have also led to rising oil consumption, declining U.S. crude production, and rising oil imports. In addition, projections show that the Free World will become increasingly dependent on oil supplies from potentially insecure sources. Therefore, we must continue our efforts to ensure that these trends do not leave the Free World more vulnerable to economically damaging oil supply disruptions.

I was heartened by congressional action on some of my May 6, 1987, recommendations, such as repeal of the Windfall Profit Tax, repeal of restrictions on the use of natural gas, and reauthorization of the Price-Anderson Act for nuclear power plants.

However, a number of my recommendations to improve the Nation's energy security have not been acted upon. I once again urge the Congress to take the following actions:

(1) Enact comprehensive legislation to deregulate wellhead prices of natural gas and to mandate open access to natural gas pipelines.

(2) Permit environmentally sound oil exploration and development of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR) in Alaska and of the Outer Continental Shelf. These areas are the most promising prospects for discovering major new oil reserves in the United States.

(3) Increase the availability of the percentage depletion allowance used in calculation of independent oil and gas producers' income taxes by repealing the "transfer rule" and increasing the net income limitation to 100 percent.

(4) Continue to fill the SPR to reach the goal of 750 million barrels. The Naval Petroleum Reserves at Elk Hills, California, and Teapot Dome, Wyoming, should be sold as a means to accelerate the SPR fill rate and to pay for a new 10 million barrel Defense Petroleum Inventory.

(5) Enact a comprehensive reform of nuclear power licensing to streamline the process and reduce costs while enhancing public safety.

Given the nature of the international oil market, the United States alone cannot assure its energy security. Consequently, we continue to work closely with our partners in the International Energy Agency (IEA) to improve our mutual energy security. With our encouragement, our IEA partners have built up their strategic stocks to 400 million barrels. Together we are making significant progress towards a more balanced mix of energy options. The specific actions I have outlined above, when implemented, will make a further, significant contribution to improving the energy security of the United States and the Free World.

WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTION ACT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 8

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying documents; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am pleased to transmit for your consideration and enactment the "Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989." Federal employees who blow the whistle on fraud, waste, abuse, and violations of the law help to ensure that the Federal Government uses American taxpayers' dollars effectively and efficiently. The Nation's laws must encourage such reports and protect those who make them from reprisal.

At the close of the last Congress, I withheld my approval from S. 508, the Whistleblower Protection Act of 1988, because of the constitutional and other defects in that bill. The measure I am transmitting today corrects those defects. The legislation protects from reprisal Federal employees who expose wrongdoing within the Government. It also ensures that Federal personnel managers are not burdened with routinely defending appropriate personnel decisions.

The "Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989" grants to Federal employees for the first time the right to initiate an action before the Merit Systems Protection Board to contest a personnel action on the ground that it was taken as a reprisal for whistleblowing. The legislation also grants job transfer preference to whistleblowers in filling jobs of equivalent status and tenure as the job held by the whistleblowing employee.

The proposed legislation establishes the Office of Special Counsel as an independent office within the Executive Branch. The Office would protect Federal employees from prohibited personnel practices. To assist in the conduct of investigations in executing this function, the Special Counsel may administer oaths, examine witnesses, take depositions, and receive evidence. The Special Counsel also may seek orders from the Merit Systems Protection Board to stay a personnel action with respect to an employee until the employee's case is resolved.

Under the bill, when the Special Counsel determines that reasonable grounds exist to believe that a prohibited personnel practice has occurred, the Special Counsel generally reports that determination to the agency involved, the Merit Systems Protection Board, the Office of Personnel Management, and in appropriate cases, the President. When necessary to ensure that an agency found to have engaged in a prohibited personnel practice takes corrective action, the Special Counsel may seek an order from the Merit Systems Protection Board requiring such action. In cases involving reprisal for whistleblowing, the individual who does not prevail in the proceeding before the Merit Systems Protection Board may seek Federal court review of the Board's decision.

The bill also entitles employees who make allegations to the Office of Special Counsel to notification of the results of the Office's investigation. The Office of Special Counsel may investigate allegations it receives and may initiate investigations on its own.

Finally, I would note that the proposed legislation does not contain the constitutional defects that were contained in S. 508 of the 100th Congress. Unlike that bill, the proposed legislation is consistent with the constitutional separation of powers, investment of the Executive power in the President, and the proper exercise of the Judicial power of the United States. I urge the Congress to enact the "Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989" swiftly to extend important protections and procedural rights to employees of the Federal Government.

In accordance with the requirements of Section 6(c) of the Federal Advisory Committee Act, as amended (Public Law 92-463, 5 U.S.C., App.), I hereby transmit the Seventeenth Annual Report on Federal Advisory Committees for Fiscal Year 1988.

REPORT ON THE STATE OF SMALL BUSINESS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 10

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Small Business:

To the Congress of the United States:

This is the eighth and final report of my Administration on the state of small business. And it is my pleasure to report to the Congress that there has never been better opportunity in America to start a business, to grow and create new jobs, to research and generate new products and technologies, and to maintain America's economic expansion.

The report for 1988 details the number of new businesses, new jobs, and new investments made by small business. I am pleased and proud that we have 5 million more businesses than we did when I took office, that there are over 1.5 million new women-owned businesses in that time, and that small business has been the major contributor in generating the nearly 18 million new jobs added to our economy since 1982.

In 1988, the 6th year of economic expansion, industries dominated by small firms continued to lead in job creation. Over 350,000 businesses were incorporated in the first half of the year alone, and bankruptcy rates decreased significantly compared to 1987.

At the January 1981 Inaugural I spoke of heroes, not the people who are famous, but the people who every day risk their money, their time, and their reputation in the community, who work hard for themselves and their neighbors, whose day-to-day contributions sum up to national greatness. If we have a greater nation today, it is not only because of economic progress, but because of growth in opportunity.

Millions of Americans continue to convert opportunities to new enterprises, new jobs, and innovative products. And by taking advantage of the opportunities available to them, they create opportunities for other Americans.

Small business owners are effective leaders in other areas as well. Increasingly, the voices of small business men and women are heard in public policy debates. Their concerns reflect not the narrow views of special interest groups, but broad perspectives on issues that affect all of us—the provision of health care for the uninsured, workplace literacy and training, and international competitiveness.

My Administration has listened to these small business owners. Many of their concerns will undoubtedly be the subject of discussion for some time to come. But in a number of specific instances, we have been able to target public and private resources and to alleviate regulatory, paperwork, or other burdens on small firms so that they will be free to do what they do best—create new enterprises, new jobs, and innovative products and processes.

One of the recommendations of the 1986 White House Conference on Small Business delegates was that the Government do a better job of paying its bills on time. I heartily agreed with this recommendation, and the Prompt Payment Act Amendments of 1988, which I signed last October, will strengthen the rules Federal agencies must follow in paying their bills.

Another priority was to strengthen the national record of research and innovation, in which small firms play such an important role. I am very pleased that the Congress agreed with my strong recommendation to extend the research and experimentation tax credit and thus keep American products competitive in the world economy.

We as a Nation have much to learn from our small business leaders. Their creative contributions and those of many other citizens will be an important resource as we search for solutions appropriate to our Nation's needs in the 21st century.

Small firms will continue to have a broad impact on American society.

They employ and train a majority of the Nation's new workers, and they will retrain many workers for new occupations in the years ahead. As we learn more about this vital sector's contributions to the economy, we will be able to shape policies at all levels of Government that will encourage the start-up and growth of America's vital small enterprises.

America's political liberty depends on economic liberty. I salute the small business community, whose strength supports our freedom.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

GREECE VOLUNTEER AMBULANCE SERVICE, INC.

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, in every community there is a group of people taken for granted. If, God forbid, a loved one is in physical danger, we assume that medical assistance will arrive. Unfortunately, we don't always appreciate this help, our local ambulance corps, unless we need it. I rise today to honor one corps in particular—the Greece Volunteer Ambulance Service [GVA] of Greece, NY—on its 30-year anniversary.

The GVA, a certified ambulance corps, is completely staffed by volunteers, and has greatly contributed to the Greece community for 30 years. Just recently, in fact, it reached its 1-million-mile mark of transport service. Other community services it provides include a 24-hour American Red Cross emergency first aid station, blood pressure checks, CPR and first aid classes, and first aid support for community events.

The GVA volunteers are certified New York State emergency medical technicians and advanced New York State emergency medical technicians. Of course, education is a must—technicians spend up to 2½ years training in either basic life support [BLS] or advanced life support [ALS]. Continuing education is also essential—every 3 years they must be recertified.

Originally incorporated with 12 charter members, the GVA's membership has grown to 150 members. First located at the old treatment plant on Dewey Avenue, it then moved to its present position at a four-bay base on Long Pond Road.

For all of their selfless and generous support to the Greece community, I salute the GVA volunteers and supporters. Their work and accomplishments do not go unnoticed. I am proud to have such a fine organization in my home State of New York.●

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, January 3, 1989

This being the day fixed by the 20th amendment of the Constitution for the annual meeting of the Congress of the United States, the Members-elect of the 101st Congress met in their Hall, and at 12 o'clock noon, were called to order by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, Hon. Donnald K. Anderson.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray: With grateful hearts, O God, we express our thanks for all Your good gifts to us; the gifts of understanding and friendship; the gifts of forgiveness and reconciliation and peace; the gifts of family, friends, and colleagues, the gifts of faith, hope, and love.

May we be worthy of the freedoms and liberties of our heritage and may we stand the test to speak and act for righteousness and justice. May the solemn responsibilities that we accept today cause us to be good stewards of the noble traditions of our free land and be faithful in our bond with the people of this Nation.

May we, O God, so live our lives that in all things we may do justice, love, mercy, and ever walk humbly with You.

This we pray. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The CLERK. Will the Members-elect and their guests please rise and join with us in the Pledge of Allegiance.

The Clerk led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

The CLERK. Representatives-elect to the 101st Congress, this is the day fixed by the 20th amendment to the Constitution for the meeting of the 101st Congress and, as the law directs, the Clerk of the House has prepared the official roll of the Representatives-elect. Pursuant to 2 U.S.C. 26, the Clerk of the 101st Congress will make the following announcement:

Certificates of election covering 435 seats in the 101st Congress have been received by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and the names of those persons whose credentials show that they were regularly elected as Representatives in accordance with the laws of their respective States and of the United States will be called.

Without objection, the Representatives-elect will record their presence by electronic device, and their names will be reported in alphabetical order by States, beginning with the State of Alabama, to determine whether a quorum is present.

There was no objection.

The call was taken by electronic device, and the following Representatives-elect responded to their names:

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2

NOT VOTING—1

The CLERK. The tellers agree in their tallies that the total number of votes cast is 425, of which the Honorable JIM WRIGHT of Texas has received 253 and the Honorable ROBERT H. MICHEL of Illinois has received 170, with 2 voting "present."

Therefore, the Honorable JIM WRIGHT, of Texas, is duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives for the 101st Congress, having received a majority of the votes cast.

The Clerk appoints the following committee to escort the Speaker-elect to the chair: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY], the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CHENEY], the gentleman from California [Mr. COELHO], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY], the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER].

The committee will retire from the Chamber to escort the Speaker-elect to the chair.

The Doorkeeper announced the Speaker-elect of the House of Representatives of the 101st Congress, who was escorted to the chair by the Committee of Escort.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues, notwithstanding my being only the second, if not the very first man in our history to suffer the indignity of losing this contest for Speaker five times in a row, I bear no ill-will. The numbers just were not there, and I thank my Republican colleagues for honoring me, again, as their ill-fated candidate for Speaker.

Two hundred years ago when the first Congress met, Fisher Ames, a Member from Massachusetts, wrote a friend that "The House is composed of sober, solid folks. There are few geniuses: There are many who have experienced the virtues of the heart and the habits of business."

I believe much the same can be said for our House membership today. Perhaps we are not the shining geniuses some others in this town think they are, but our Members in the main continue to be solid and hard-working, and we still bring to this House from our hometowns, the virtues of the heart.

But even a hard-working and most well-meaning body of men and women needs periodically to examine its behavior and analyze its rules and regulations, and it is my belief that in this 101st Congress is one that should deal right up front in a bipartisan and comprehensive way with reforms dealing with campaign reform and our ethical code of conduct.

The key words are "comprehensive" and "bipartisan."

We need to act in a comprehensive manner because we have a number of problems that need our attention.

And let me say a few things about that much-abused word "bipartisan."

Bipartisanship does not mean nonpartisanship. It does not mean the artificial blurring of political distinctions in the name of some specious unity. Quite to the contrary. In order for bipartisanship to work, each side must be clear about the principles for which it stands. It is out of the clash of debate and discussion that true bipartisanship solutions evolve.

If the House is to be a truly representative one in the 101st Congress, Mr. Speaker, then the opposing visions of Republicans and Democrats must be presented in all their contrasting strengths, clashing when it is necessary to clash and compromising when we are able to compromise.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there will be no problem in discerning the views of House Republicans. We will make them known in a clear and forceful manner as we debate matters of important public policy.

I can also assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there will be no problem finding Republicans with good ideas, ready and willing to work with our Democratic colleagues in fashioning and crafting good legislative proposals.

Let me say finally, Mr. Speaker, that the Speaker's chair is one of our most revered symbols of authority. But there is another great symbol of our House—the table.

In the very language of this Chamber, the second highest motion is to "lay on the table." We talk about laying our cards on the table and sitting around the table to compromise our differences. That is, frankly, what I see Republicans and Democrats doing as the House begins its third century sitting around the table—albeit in unequal numbers—but as respectful adversaries, discussing the great public issues of our time and always facing each other squarely. And our respective roles, Mr. Speaker, dictate that we work together as "partisans" in true "bipartisan" fashion, and I do welcome that opportunity.

So, ladies and gentleman of the House, in keeping with the traditions of this House the vanquished presents the victor. It is my high honor and privilege to present to you the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

[Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. WRIGHT. Thank you for that, my colleagues. Thank you for your friendship. Thank you, BOB MICHEL, for the graciousness of that presentation, for your words, always incisive, always insightful, often inspiring.

I hope you will not mind or take exception if I disagree on an occasion such as this with your quoting of Fisher Ames, who said that the House was composed of sober, solid folk but few geniuses.

I thought a moment ago, when they conducted the rollcall just ended, that I could discern 425 sober, solid folk of whom I was just absolutely certain that 253 were sheer geniuses.

I had another definition of the House that was uttered on one occasion by former Speaker Henry Clay. I was about to use that quote today, but the last time I used it CLAUDE PEPPER rose and said, "Now, Mr. Speaker, I knew Henry Clay; I served with Henry Clay; Henry Clay was a friend of mine; and with all respect, Mr. Speaker, you're no Henry Clay."

This is truly a historic moment. Two hundred years ago, in 1789, the First Congress met in New York to face the daunting challenge of beginning to build a nation under the revolutionary new concept of representative self-government. On the opening of this 101st Congress, we can reflect that their audacious undertaking became a beacon for people throughout the world who also yearned to breathe free.

In 1789 ours was the only constitutional democracy on Earth. Today there are 60 of us, and the tide of history is running in our favor. After 70 years of Marxist trial and error, the verdict is clear. The Communist ideology and the totalitarian regimes installed to enforce it have failed. We see instead the emergence of democratic movements throughout the Earth in some of the most unexpected places—in Asia and in Eastern Europe. Even in the Soviet Union itself and in Mainland China, the irresistible clamor for a more personal freedom is making itself felt in profound ways.

We may be present at the end of one era and at the beginning of another.

These past 40 years have been dominated by a titantic military and political competition between the two superpowers, and that bipolar world is giving way to a new reality in which the competition—every bit as fateful and intense—is increasingly economic rather than military and in which there are not two but three emerging aggregations of power—one is a rapidly developing Asia, another in an ever more integrated Europe, and the third here in the Western Hemisphere.

Just as the Members of the First Congress faced a new world of challenges and uncertainties, so do we. The House of Representatives, both then and now, has been the most sensitive barometer of the public need and the most malleable instrument of the public will. It is closer to the people than any other instrumentality of government, and that is the way it was intended.

The House did not exactly hit the ground running those 200 years ago. It took 25 meetings over a 29-day period just to obtain a quorum. But once established, the House in that First Congress initiated significant legislation dealing with internal development, foreign trade, roads, rivers, domestic industry, and the world at large. Its Members had a hand in writing the most important declaration of individual political rights in human history—the Bill of Rights. This was the people's House, and that is what it has been ever since.

BOB MICHEL, a moment ago, quoted Fisher Ames as saying that it consisted of sober, solid folk but few geniuses. That was at least more charitable than the definition given by the French aristocrat, Alexis de Tocqueville, who in 1831 wrote of the "vulgarity and poverty of talent" that he saw in the House of Representatives. De Tocqueville wrote that the "eye frequently does not discover a man of celebrity within its walls. Its Members are," he said, "almost all obscure individuals whose names present no associations to the mind. They are mostly village lawyers, men in trade, or even persons belonging to the lower classes of society."

And if, as we look about this Chamber today, we think anything basic has changed in that perception, it would be not because the House has changed but because of the dramatic and forceful changes that have taken place in these 200 years in this society itself, of which we are a mirror and an accurate reflection. Contrary to certain misconceptions, this supposedly staid institution of static membership actually is the scene of continual change and constant turnover.

A majority of the Members here in this Chamber today were not even here at the beginning of this decade. Only about one-fifth of our membership has served for more than 15 years. So, in this, as in our essential character, this House reflects the Nation, ever changing, ever moving and growing, struggling, often uncomfortably and sometimes awkwardly, to accommodate itself to the tidal onrush of events and to try to have a hand in directing those events. Let us resolve, as we begin this 101st Congress, that we shall be equal to that challenge and worthy of that opportunity.

In 17 days GEORGE HERBERT WALKER BUSH will be inaugurated as the 41st President of the United States. I know that I speak for all of us, Democrats and Republicans alike, in wishing for him success in his mighty endeavors.

He undertakes what has been called a splendid misery, the most awesome responsibility on Earth. There can be no partisanship among us in wishing for GEORGE BUSH success and happiness and health at his hearthside. We wish for him the vision to see the right, the courage to stand for the right and the ability to achieve it, the understanding and cooperation of his fellow creatures, and the finest blessings of all that come only from God. These things we wish to our President-elect, GEORGE HERBERT WALKER BUSH.

In a nation where free men and women think for themselves unanimity is hardly ever possible. It may not even be desirable, but, when we let the larger things that unite us transcend the lesser concerns that divide us, we can achieve the essential unity which is necessary in dealing with other lands on this planet Earth. And so today I pledge to President BUSH the earnest and unstinting cooperation of the leadership of this House in seeking true bipartisanship in every area of our Nation's foreign policy.

Let us honestly and gratefully acknowledge the leadership of the Reagan administration in improving relations with the Soviet Union, helping to abate the crisis in the Persian Gulf, and in encouraging the growth and sustenance of political freedom in countries throughout the world. We owe to this administration our thanks and the thanks of the Nation for those achievements.

Because President-elect BUSH has served in this House I am encouraged that he will exhibit an appreciation for the constitutional responsibilities of the Congress and that he will seek avenues of cooperation between our executive and legislative branches.

And, just as there is need for cooperation and help between branches of our Government, there also is need for greater consultation and cooperation between the two political parties in the House of Representatives. The minority, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] has said, does have a point of view and a constructive role to play in the legislative process. I am eager to encourage that role. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] spoke of a table as the symbol of our general equality among one another, equal access to expression and to participation. Let me add that I hope it will be a roundtable, without head, without foot, and, if there are those of you here who, like I, are of a large family which occasionally had family reunions, let me express the hope that there will not be any second table. We will all eat at the first table together.

Certainly we will not be able to agree on everything, but let us emphasize those broad goals on which we do agree and work together to achieve them.

Our Nation struggles to overcome three deficits, the budget deficit, the trade deficit, and the social deficit caused by the widening gap between the rich and poor and the growing inaccessibility of such necessary fundamentals as housing, higher education, and health care. We cannot expect to vanquish all those evils entirely in the 101st Congress, but, if we have the will, we can make significant progress against all three deficits.

Both political parties are publicly committed to doing so. Neither party has an exclusive franchise upon the wish to make our country better and more humane, and, by working together, we can help our new President fulfill his beautiful promise of a kinder, gentler America.

We in the House leadership are eager to help him attain the goals he has expressed: Wider access for all Americans to education, to child care, to affordable housing, and to a cleaner environment. Today we offer to our new President and to our old friend, Jack Kemp, in his new Cabinet role, the sincere cooperation of the House leadership in reviving the vitality of our decaying inner cities through the creative dynamic of enterprise zones.

Working together we can remove the scourge of drugs from our streets and from our schools. We made significant progress on that bipartisan goal. Let us work together now for full funding so that we make that pledge a reality.

Working together we can pass a clean air bill this year. Let us make that one of our objectives.

By working together we can clean up the murky areas of campaign financing, broaden the basis of small individual contributions and reduce the influence of special interests in our electoral process. This deserves our joint commitment, which I now invite.

As my colleagues know, to profess love for democracy, but disdain for the political process, is to pretend to honor the product while despising the process that creates it. Politics is just as necessary to the functioning of our free society as water is to the flow of a river. It does not have to be filthy and corrupted, and neither does the river. We have the wisdom, if we have the will, to keep them both clean.

As well, we have the responsibility, I believe, to make certain that every citizen's vote counts equally in our Presidential elections. We can help to ensure that by a uniform poll closing law, such as the one that the House passed in the last Congress on which I now invite and ask cooperation of the Senate.

There is hardly a limit to what we can achieve if, in truth, we can work together. By working together we can steadily reduce and eventually eliminate the annual budget deficits that threaten our economic future. We must and we shall.

But Democrats and Republicans made contributions last year to landmark trade legislation. Let us not abandon that effort until America attains the objective of a revived industrial base, fed by enhanced productivity and renewed competitiveness. There is more work to be done and together we can do it.

We can even lift the standards of our own institutional self-expectations.

To this end, Republican leader BOB MICHEL and I have agreed that we will appoint within the next few days a bipartisan task force to review the current standards of official conduct for Members, last revised 12 years ago, and to recommend such improvements and updating as seem warranted under current conditions.

This is going to be a very, very busy and productive year for the 101st Congress. I am determined that so far as the Speaker can influence the schedule, we shall perform our work on time. Just as we did last year, the House will pass all 13 of our regular appropriation bills before we leave for the August recess.

Now, in order to make that possible, we intend to pass the budget resolution by April 15, as the law commands, and for that to happen the authorizing committees must submit a summary of their plans for new authorizations before the end of February. To facilitate this timetable, we need to receive the budget recommendations from the new administration not later than February 20, if at all possible.

In view of these time constraints and the size and scope of the tasks that confront us, I am today asking all the House committees to make every effort to complete all of their organizational work by the end of January, and we will try to accommodate that schedule on the House floor.

Today I shall take the oath of office for the 18th time as a Member of this House. Some of you will be taking it for the first time.

In 1941 when Sam Rayburn was sworn in for his second term as Speaker, he said this:

> The House of Representatives has been my life and my love for more than a quarter of a century. I love its traditions. I love its precedents. I love its dignity. I glory in the power of the House of Representatives.

He said:

As your Speaker and presiding officer, it shall be my highest hope and unswerving aim to preserve, protect and defend the rights, prerogatives, and the power of the House of Representatives.

As I look around our Chamber today and see the new Members, their families and special friends who have come from far to be here, I rejoice in the sense of commitment that pervades this occasion. However long each of us has been here or will be here, there can be no higher calling in earthly labor than to participate in glorifying and sustaining the longest running democracy that has ever endured to serve and bless mankind in the history of the human race.

I am ready now to take the oath of office. If the gentleman from Mississippi, the dean of the House, the distinguished JAMIE WHITTEN, would come forward and administer the oath, I shall take it and then administer the oath to the other Members.

Mr. WHITTEN then administered the oath of office to Mr. WRIGHT of Texas.

[Applause, the Members rising.]

(12) In rule XXVIII, amend clause 1 by—

(a) adding the following new paragraph after paragraph (a):

(b) redesignating paragraphs (b) and (c) as paragraphs (c) and (d), respectively; and

(c) adding immediately prior to the semicolon in paragraph (c) (as so redesignated) the following: "(but only on the day after the calendar day on which the Member making the motion announces to the House his intention to do so and the form of the motion)".

"2. The Clerk shall deliver the records transferred pursuant to clause 1 of this rule, together with any other noncurrent records of the House, to the Archivist of the United States for preservation at the National Archives and Records Administration. Records so delivered are the permanent property of the House and remain subject to this rule and the orders of the House.

"3. (a) Subject to paragraph (b) of this clause, clause 4 of this rule, and orders of the House, the Clerk shall authorize the Archivist of the United States to make available for public use the records delivered to the Archivist under clause 2 of this rule.

"(2) Any investigative record that contains personal data relating to a specific living individual (the disclosure of which would be an unwarranted invasion or personal privacy), any administrative record with respect to personnel, and any record with respect to a hearing closed pursuant to clause 2(g)(2) of rule XI shall be available if such record has been in existence for 50 years.

"(3) Any record for which a time, schedule, or condition for availability is specified by order of the House shall be made available in accordance with that order. (14) In rule XLVIII, amend clause 1(a) by striking "seventeen" and inserting in lieu thereof "nineteen".

Mr. COELHO (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. COELHO] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS], for the purposes of debate only, pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER-ELECT

The SPEAKER. First, permit the Chair to administer the oath to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MARLENEE], who was unavoidably delayed.

Will the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MARLENEE] kindly come to the well of the House and take the oath of office at this time?

Mr. MARLENEE appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST].

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the recommended changes to the rules of the House embodied in House Resolution 5, comprise a relatively modest package of changes and additions to the Rules of the House for the 101st Congress. In most instances, the rules changes recommended in House Resolution 5 will enhance the ability of the House to operate in a smooth and predictable fashion. At this time, I would like to take a few minutes to very briefly summarize the recommended changes.

The first amendment enables the Speaker to postpone votes for up to 2 legislative days on the question of agreeing to motions to instruct conferees that are made after a conference has been meeting for 20 calendar days and has not made a report. The amendment does provide, however, that in the case that the conference in question does report prior to the time the Speaker has announced he will put the question, the question shall not be put, and therefore, no vote will occur on the motion to instruct the conferees.

The second amendment is a very simple amendment which requires that the televised broadcasts of the proceedings of the House of Representatives be closed captioned in order that deaf and hearing impaired Americans may have access to these broadcasts.

The third amendment establishes a permanent Office of the Historian in the House of Representatives which will serve as the successor office to the current Office of the Bicentennial.

The fourth amendment is an amendment which has been included in this package at the request of the Republican leader. As Members know, clause 1(e) of rule X provides that in the case of both the majority and the minority, no Member may serve for more than three Congresses of any five successive Congresses on the Budget Committee, with the exception of the Member who serves as the representative of the leadership of the respective parties. Since 1974, the minority leadership representative has served as both the ranking minority member and the leadership representative. However, with the retirement of that Member at the end of the 100th Congress, the Republican Conference has adopted a rule which would require that the ranking Member and the leadership Member be two separate individuals. The proposed amendment to rule X does two things: First, the amendment would allow in the 101st Congress only, a minority member who has served for three terms on the committee, to run within the Republican Conference, for the position of ranking minority member and thus be able to serve on the Budget Committee for one more additional Congress than is permitted by rule X. Second, the amendment would create what is commonly known as the "Giaimo" rule for the minority which would provide, as is provided for the majority, that if a Republican Member is elected as ranking minority member during his third term on the Budget Committee, that he shall be eligible to serve for one additional term on the Budget Committee should he be reelected by the conference as the ranking minority member.

The 5th, 7th, and 13th amendments incorporate the text of House Resolution 419 as reported by the Committee on Rules late in the 100th Congress. These amendments to rule XI and rule XXXVI were reported from the Committee on Rules on a bipartisan basis, but because the resolution was reported late in the session, it was never considered by the full House. These amendments establish a general rule making records of the House and its committees available after 30 years. The current standard is 50 years, which this amendment retains for records of closed sessions, personnel records and investigative files relating to an individual. The change also authorizes a committee to establish shorter or longer limits for its own records or portions of those records. I should note that the amendment does not affect records that have been previously published or otherwise generally available for use, nor does it affect the disposition of the records of a Member's congressional office.

The 6th amendment makes two changes in the text of clause 2(i) of House rule XI. First, the amendment permits the Committee on House Administration to sit without special leave of the House when the House is operating under the 5-minute rule. Currently, only the Committees on Appropriations, Budget, Rules, Standards of Official Conduct, and Ways and Means are allowed to sit during the 5-minute rule without special leave of the House. Second, the amendment creates a new subparagraph in this clause which prohibits all committees from meeting during a Joint Session or during a recess of the House when a joint meeting is in progress. This new subparagraph does not provide special leave for committees to meet as is provided in clause (2)(i)(1). Finally, the amendment changes the heading of clause 2(i) to reflect the inclusion of the new subparagraph (2) which prohibits committee meetings during joint sessions and joint meetings.

The 8th amendment clarifies the status of "associate staff" who are assigned to the Committee on Rules. Currently, Members who serve on the Committees on Appropriations, Budget, and Rules are assigned an "associate staff" member who works directly for the Member but whose salary is paid from the budget of the committee. Clause 6(a)(5) of rule XI currently exempts the "associate staff" of the Committees on Appropriations and Budget from the requirements of subparagraphs 6(a)(3)(B) and 6(a)(3)(C), but the current rule does not exempt "associate staff" of the Committee on Rules. The requirements of those subparagraphs, which apply only to professional staff, prohibit such staff from engaging in any work other than committee business and prohibit the staff member from being assigned any duties other than those pertaining to committee business. While most associate staff work full-time on the business of the committee to which their Member is assigned, there are instances which a staff member may be called upon to engage in other business associated with the Member's other congressional duties. This amendment would extend the exemption currently in the House rules for "associate staff" of the Committees on Appropriations and Budget to the "associate staff" of the Committee on Rules.

The ninth amendment amends clause 6(c) of rule XI which relates to pay levels for committee employees. For some years, the rules of the House have imposed a pay ceiling for committee staff equal to the rate for level V of the executive schedule, and, in addition, have allowed two members of the professional staff of each committee to be paid at a higher rate, equal to level IV of the executive schedule. In all cases, these are ceilings, and the chairman of each committee is responsible for setting staff pay, within the limit.

However, in the continuing resolution of fiscal year 1988, Congress authorized the President pro tempore and the Speaker to issue pay orders setting pay rates for staff positions in their respective Houses. A uniform pay ceiling, set by the Speaker's most recent pay order in the 100th Congress, is higher than either of the rates specified in clause 6(c) of rule XI.

If the Rules of the House are readopted for the 101st Congress containing the obsolete language of the current clause 6(c) of rule XI, there is concern that the language in the rule would be construed as the "latest rulemaking" action of the House. To avoid this potential ambiguity, this amendment revises the rule to eliminate all references to executive branch pay levels. This amendment makes no changes in pay, and the ceilings now in effect would continue unchanged.

The 10th amendment proposes to expand permissible references to the Senate in House debate by allowing Members to include factual descriptions of Senate action or inaction on a measure then under debate in the House and to allow quotation from Senate proceedings when such quotation is relevant to making legislative history for a measure then under debate. The change would only apply when a measure, or a companion measure, is under debate in the House. Characterizations of Senate action or inaction or of individual Members of the Senate would remain improper.

The 11th amendment seeks to amend clause 5 of rule XV to allow the Speaker to reduce the time subsequent to the first 15-minute vote to not less than 5 minutes on a series of rollcall votes on amendments reported back to the House from the Committee of the Whole. The amendment does provide, however, that if there is intervening business between these votes, the subsequent vote on any amendment reported to the House must again be 15 minutes in duration and any following votes may again be reduced to not less than 5 minutes.

The 12th amendment makes two changes in clause 1 of House rule XXVIII. The first change provides that when a motion to instruct conferees is under consideration, the debate time must be equally divided between the majority and the minority. Further, the amendment provides that if both the majority and minority members recognized are in favor of the motion, that the debate time must be divided three ways to give an opponent of the motion 20 minutes of debate on the motion to instruct the conferees. The second change relates to motions to instruct conferees who have been meeting for 20 calendar days. The amendment requires a Member to announce to the House his intention to offer a motion to instruct conferees on the calendar day before he intends to make the motion and also requires the Member to announce what his motion will be in order that other Members may be on notice of the subject of the motion to instruct.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the 14th amendment increases the size of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence from 17 members to 19.

Mr. Speaker, that concludes my explanation of the package of rules changes embodied in House Resolution 5.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is my intention that after the debate is concluded we will try to defeat the previous question so that we are able to offer a substitute.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask for a "no" vote on the previous question, so that the House will have an opportunity to consider an alternative package of House rules changes proposed by the Republican Conference.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to address particularly some of those proposed changes in the Republican package which affect the House Rules Committee. I have served as the ranking Republican member of the Rules Committee since 1975 and I speak from experience when I say there is a need for procedural change.

The first proposal I would like to address deals with the increasing use of restrictive rules which limit or sometimes prohibit amendments. The use of restrictive rules has increased in each of the last six Congresses. In the 95th Congress only 12 percent of the rules providing for initial consideration of bills were restrictive. By the 100th Congress 43 percent of rules providing for such consideration were restrictive. This procedure hurts Democrats and Republicans alike. Your constituents sent you here to represent them. When a restrictive rule from the Rules Committee prevents you from offering your ideas for the consideration of the House, your constituents lose part of their representation. The Nation loses because some good ideas may never even be considered by the House. While there may be a few occasions when the use of a restrictive rule is appropriate, its use has become commonplace. It is a procedure which should be used only in exceptional circumstances.

The Republican proposal for improving the House rules would deal with this problem by prohibiting any rule from the Rules Committee restricting amendments, unless the chairman of the Rules Committee has orally announced in the House, at least 4 legislative days prior to the Rules Committee meeting on the matter, that less than an open amendment process might be recommended by the committee.

If this proposed rule change is adopted it would not eliminate all restrictive rules, but it would at least ensure that there is adequate time to consider whether a restrictive rule is really necessary.

Mr. Speaker, another problem which has gotten worse in recent years is the use of self-executing rules from the Rules Committee. Self-executing rules are those which provide for the automatic adoption of an amendment or other matter upon the adoption of the rule. This takes away from the House the opportunity for a separate vote on the substance of the matter. This is a procedure which was not used at all during the 96th Congress. It was used on just 1 percent of the rules in the 97th Congress. By the 100th Congress it was used on 16 percent of rules reported by the Rules Committee.

Mr. Speaker, denial of Members' rights to have separate votes on amendments should be discouraged. The Republican proposal for changes in the House rules would improve this situation by prohibiting self-executing rules from the Rules Committee, unless there was a two-thirds vote of the House to agree to consider such a rule.

This change would serve to reduce the number of self-executing rules. It would not be so easy to deny Members the right to have a separate vote on separate issues. This should not be a partisan issue, Mr. Speaker. Both Democrats and Republicans should have the ability to vote for things they favor without having to swallow at the same time things they oppose.

Mr. Speaker, another problem which was been with us for years is the large number of waivers of the Budget Act which have been included in rules reported from the Rules Committee. Mr. Speaker, if we are going to have a Budget Act, we should follow it.

In the last Congress, Mr. Speaker, there were 37 Budget Act waivers and another 47 waivers of all points of order, which would include the Budget Act. Mr. Speaker, the use of budget waivers might be justified in rare circumstances, but it is not justified in the large number of cases where it has been used.

Moreover, the use of blanket waivers of all points of order has increased from none in the 96th Congress to 47 in the 100th Congress. When blanket waivers of all points of order are used it is difficult for Members to know which specific rules are being violated. This is not good procedure, Mr. Speaker.

The Republican proposal for improvements in the House rules would require that any report from the Rules Committee on a rule waiving the Budget Act would include an explanation and justification of the waiver. The Rules Committee report would also be required to include any comments received from the Budget Committee concerning the budget waiver.

The proposed Republican rules changes would provide that a separate vote could be demanded on any budget act waiver. In addition, rules containing blanket waivers of all points of order would require a two-thirds vote for consideration. This should help to reduce the number of blanket waivers.

Mr. Speaker, these changes I have described are not partisan changes. They would be good for Democrats and Republicans alike. Therefore, I ask for a "no" vote on the previous question so that it will be possible to offer the Republican package of improvements to the House rules.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, the result of gerrymandering of congressional districts around the country following the 1980 decennial census has given us little change in the makeup of the House during the 1980's. Fewer than 20 percent of our races were seriously contested in the last election. So the Democratic Party will again control this House with a wide margin of 261 to 174 and we will be playing by rules promulgated by the majority party.

Despite it all, we on the Republican side seek to defeat the previous question to make a couple of points. The first is that the rules of this body have not been reformed in a comprehensive bipartisan way in a number of years, but they really do need it. And there is an urgent need for reform.

But instead of reform we get isolated adjustments with each new Congress. Gradually, minority rights have been eroded and the party in power is strengthened.

I say we ought to have comprehensive reform. We should ban proxy voting, reduce the number of subcommittees, cut staff, cut spending, halt abuses of franked mail, stop campaigning at taxpayers' expense, and, most importantly, blow the doors off the Chamber and let in the clean, fresh air of open and free debate. Those reforms would make this a more representative House, a better House.

We on this side of the aisle have such a proposal to make. We have a better plan. We can give the American people a glimpse of what the legislative branch of government would be like under Republican rules.

Mr. Speaker, I have designated the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. MICKEY EDWARDS, our new chairman of our policy committee, to shepherd the debate on our side during the balance of today in this regard.

But in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this is the bicentennial Congress. It should be something special. It should be the beginning of a new era in our great Democratic experiment. I would like to think of it as being a Congress of restoration, restoring representative government to its rightful place at the center of that experiment, at the focus of our political life and at the heart of what we do in this House.

Representative government begins with us and the rules we set for ourselves. In this bicentennial Congress we ought to set a good example and adopt some better rules.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives is beginning its third century of existence, with the swearing of Members of the 101st Congress, this oldest and greatest national representative assembly celebrates a historic achievement.

And while all Members feel a justifiable sense of pride in serving at such time of commemoration and congratulation, I believe the times also compel us to face up to the fact that this House is experiencing an institutional crisis of profoundly disturbing proportions.

Indeed, if this House cannot find a better and more responsible way of managing its affairs and meeting its constitutional obligations, the interests of the whole country will continue to suffer. And the lofty ideal of representative government will be held in disrepute.

The evidence of crisis can be seen all around us. The House gets organized late and spends most of the year meeting on only 2 or 3 days a week. The proliferation of subcommittees and staff has led inevitably to a strangulation of the committee system—where most of our work has to get done. As subcommittees compete for turf and for the undivided attention of Members, full committees employ skewed party ratios, proxy voting, and one-third quorum rules in order to get any legislation through at all.

In the full House, the majority party's leadership has turned increasingly toward the use of closed rules and so-called self-executing rules in order to keep the wheels of legislative machinery turning—however creakily. And the Rules Committee now spends most of its time writing exceptions to House rules and issuing budget waivers.

Reconciliation and appropriations bills are littered with extraneous language and unauthorized programs. Meanwhile, bills are reaching the floor that were never passed by any committee—complete rewrites are undertaken in secret by committee kingpins whose jurisdictional lines overlap. Amendments are killed or resurrected at will, depending on the majority leadership's pleasure.

A decade ago, less than one-tenth of the public laws enacted by Congress were of a commemorative or nonsubstantive nature. In the 100th Congress, more than one-third of the public laws passed were in the commemorative or nonsubstantive category. And the unfinished public business of our country continues to be left unattended.

Mr. Speaker, the blame for this institutional crisis can be attributed to many causes. But candor compels us to recognize that the perpetuation of crisis has come to serve the political interests of the majority leadership. In conducting its business, the emphasis this House has placed on so-called efficiency has been purchased at the expense of accountability.

James Madison, who was a member of the first House of Representatives 200 years ago, was also bothered by the problem of balancing efficiency with accountability. And he warned us about it in the Federalist papers. In writing specifically about the functions of the House of Representatives, Madison practically envisioned the present-day situation in this House:

> The countenance of the Government may become more Democratic, but the soul that animates it will be more oligarhic. The machine will be enlarged, but the fewer, and often the more secret, will be the springs by which its motions are directed.

Mr. Speaker, this house is conducting its business in an increasingly autocratic, irrational, and unfair manner. The House is becoming ever more crippled in the exercise of its oversight responsibilities and in its authority over the Federal Budget. And may I say that the "business as usual" rules package that it being offered by the majority today does not even begin to address these problems.

We must defeat the previous question so that the House will have an opportunity—today—to debate and vote on a rules package which really does offer reform, a rules package which really does restore accountability to the deliberations of this House.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican rules package was not fashioned by a secret task force. Ideas and suggestions were solicited from every Member on this side of the aisle. The package addresses every significant aspect of how the House is to be managed.

It places particular emphasis on the committee system and the budget process, those two areas which informed observers have long identified as being the most indicative of how the House is, in fact, being mismanaged.

THE COMMITTEE SYSTEM

Turning first to the committee system, I would note that the Republican rules package incorporates many worthwhile proposals that have been offered in the past. In the interest of fairness and accountability, we propose:

Requiring that party membership ratios on all standing, select, and conference committees (with the exception of the ethics committee) reflect the party ratio in the full House;

Requiring a better balance in the allocation of staff positions, as well as reducing the runaway growth in the number of staff positions;

Eliminating proxy voting in committees; and

Mandating that a working quorum consist of a majority of members on a committee.

A couple of new proposals this year, in the interest of fairness and accountability, include:

Requiring that committee meetings be kept open for all but the most compelling national security or personal reasons; and

Requiring that committee reports on bills include the names of those Members who voted for and against it, and, in the case of a nonrecorded vote, the names of those Members who were actually present when the bill was ordered reported.

In the interest of having an efficient committee system, we propose:

Limiting the number of subcommittees; and

Eliminating the practice of joint referrals to multiple committees, while retaining authority for the Speaker and the committee of original jurisdiction to assign sequential or split referrals.

On a new proposal this year, the Republican rules package would require the Rules Committee to report by the end of this year a more rational and functional jurisdictional system for committees, aimed at eliminating the present overlappings and inefficiencies.

THE BUDGET PROCESS

Turning now to the budget process—something which lies at the very heart of government and on which the constitution places special responsibilities for the House—the Republican rules package also retains several past proposals. We propose:

Limiting the size of appropriations in both short- and long-term continuing resolutions;

Prohibiting legislative language and unauthorized matters in long-term CR's;

Requiring that long-term CR's contain the full text of all provisions to be enacted, as well as cost estimates;

Requiring that all general appropriations measures include a listing of all legislative provisons and unauthorized activities being funded therein; and

Putting teeth back into the reconciliation process by eliminating extraneous items from such bills and requiring that waivers of the budget act be subject to a vote by the full house.

In addition, the Republican rules package this year contains important new safeguards for the budget process. We propose:

Giving the President authority to rescind budget authority for any unauthorized program, unless Congress enacts a joint resolution of disapproval. This new provision would serve two purposes. It would give the President much needed authority to control the spending add-ons that have made such a mockery of the budget process. And it would compel the authorizing committees to revive the oversight and authorization processes that have been neglected so seriously in recent years.

And, finally, we propose:

Requiring automatic rollcall votes on final passage for all appropriations bills, tax hikes, member pay raises, conference reports, budget resolutions, and increases in the national debt limit.

MANAGING THE HOUSE

The Republican rules package also contains a number of provisions that would affect the way in which sessions in the full House are conducted and the manner in which staff is treated. Aside from requiring a 5-day workweek, the Republican package contains some interesting new ideas. We propose:

Allowing motions to recommit, including those with instructions, on all bills;

Requiring 4-day notice before the Rules Committee could meet to report less than an open rule;

Making so-called self-executing rules, which by their very nature serve to approve other pieces of legislation, subject to a two-thirds vote of the full House; and, finally

Requiring legislation by June 30 of this year that would apply essential health, safety, labor, and civil rights laws to Congress. Isn't it about time that the laws we require the rest of the country to live by were upheld in Congress as well? This is an atrocious double-standard which has been crying out for redress.

CONCLUSION

I would just conclude, Mr. Speaker, by making one observation. This brief debate here this afternoon may seem to many members, particularly on the majority side of the aisle, to be just another pro forma exercise. But on this side of the aisle, we are viewing it very seriously.

The House of Representatives is facing a crisis of accountability. And the tenor of the proceedings here this afternoon, on the first day of the 101st Congress, will go a long way toward determining whether or not this House can put itself in order.

May I say that a continuation of the status quo—"business as usual"—is unacceptable. And the day when members on this side of the aisle will just sit back and take it is long since over. Power is abused in this Chamber and throughout this House. And the American people are going to become better informed about it—you can bet on that.

Early in my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I quoted form James Madison, another one of his statements in the Federalist papers resonates loudly in our present situation:

> Complaints are everywhere heard that the public good is disregarded in the conflicts of rival parties, and that measures are to often decided, not according to the rules of justice and the rights of the minor party, but by the superior force of a self-interested and overbearing majority.

A more accurate description of this House of Representatives could not be written. This House is becoming unrepresentative and undemocratic. And be advised that, starting today. This side of the aisle is going to do something about it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The other day, Mr. Speaker, I saw a sign on the back of a car that said, "Do not steal from the government, they do not like the competition." The problem with that is that it says something about the kind of faith that people have in Government and the kind of trust that they have in Government, and it seems to me, something about the rules process because the fact is that the rules we are probably going to adopt today are essentially the same rules we have been operating under for the last several sessions, and they do not mean much.

Whenever the majority decides that the rules should be put aside to do something they want to do, they simply set the rules aside. We have a rule in this House that says before we spend money we need to authorize the money. In other words, before the money can be spent on one side we are supposed to have a committee look at it and actually authorize that spending.

All the time in Congress we are saying that we do not want to have that rule apply, that we set aside the authorization process in favor of only an appropriation process, and then we wonder why we spend so much money that we cannot afford.

I would hope that Members will defeat the previous question. I hope that in so doing they will allow Members to offer a rules package that will hold Members more accountable. That is the whole effort that is before us here today, whether or not we will be held accountable by the voters for that which we do, or whether or not we will use the rules that we have been using over the last several years to simply ignore the will of the people and to ignore representative democracy. I would hope we would defeat the previous question, adopt a new rules package. Let us be held accountable. Let us have rules that mean something rather than what we have had before that do not mean much.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, we have on this side of the aisle complained about the rules for years with no tallying effect on the makeup of those rules, and we are doing so again today, and I am not going through the awful litany of the unfairness of the rules to the minority or the way that the rules work, how they are invoked, the limitations in the rules that prevent the offering of amendments that squelch debate and prevent this House from working in the way that the framers expected it to work. Those points are all well-known and need not be further developed.

It is only my hope that sometime in the future there will be a majority with the good sense to restore to the House those rules which allow it to work their will and allow a majority to complete their program, and yet allow a minority to attack that program, and have a fair shot at it, which is not the case, under the way the rules are written and under the way the rules are employed at this time.

However, I do have one point I would like to make and that is that the new rules, there is a change, and it is that the House rule No. 1 is going to be amended by adding a new clause 10 creating a permanent Office of the Historian of the House.

I think most Members of this House have not got any idea that we have a historian. As a matter of fact, in 1982, the House rejected the idea of creating or establishing an Office of House Historian, beat that proposition rather badly, 132 to 180. After that very stern defeat the rulers of this establishment created the Office anyway, and we have had for a couple of years a House historian. Now, theoretically, this job was created so that we could prepare for the Bicentennial Congress.

We have had a nice bicentennial Congress, and now I guess we are going to have another nice bicentennial Congress. That job will terminate on September 30 under the current rules. By approving the rules which are presented to us today, we are going to make that job permanent and create another high wage job, notwithstanding the fact that we have a fine Library of Congress to help us with our history, we have a fine Capitol Historical Society, and we have committees by the score that can help us with history, but nevertheless, because the Senate had an historian, we have to have an historian.

Mr. Speaker, this is an absurd use of the taxpayers' money, and it alone should cause the defeat of the rules that are being submitted today.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS], chairman of the Republican Conference.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the fact that the gentleman from Oklahoma is being so generous with his time.

I had planned to take no time at all on this issue, but I could not help but choose a moment, this moment, to respond to the Speaker's comment to the House earlier today. The newly elected Speaker indicated that within this great body we sit at a table as equals, and that that table is indeed, by his description, a round table, with no head, no tail, but, rather, one in which the entire family comes together.

Let me suggest that the glue that holds such a table together involves the rules of the House.

It has been suggested by people who know much more about the rules and processes of the House than I, that from time to time that glue has not been applied with fairness and equality. I would suggest that as we address the question of revising the rules of this House, we also pay careful attention to the way in which we exercise those rules. If fairness is a part of the process, indeed we will all enjoy our work at that round table.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Oklahoma for yielding this time to me.

I guess what I would like to do for just a minute is put in some kind of context what we are going through today and why this is both very, very important and at the same time very, very obscure. Most of the real structures of power set up by a parliamentary body like the U.S. House are set up by the way the rules are structured, by the way the committees are structured, and by the way the schedule is designed, so that very often the choices Members actually get to make on a day-to-day basis on the floor of the House have been prearranged. It is like playing a card game when on some days one side gets 17 cards and the other side gets 4 cards, or playing a card game where one side deals to itself only until it gets 4 aces. These initial clearly not exciting, clearly not dynamic, fights over rules, fights over the very structure of the system go to the heart of a legislative body.

I listened with great interest earlier as the Speaker indicated more interest in bipartisanship than I suspect we have heard from a Speaker in modern times. I think if one were to go through the speech of the Speaker and just take the number of times he used the term, "bipartisanship"—he said we would have to rise above partisanship, and he said we have to have a round table so the whole family could gather and we could all sit at the main table—if we were to take step-by-step the number of promises that were a good public oratory and then look at the rules that have been offered which in fact further shift power toward the Democrats and further design a system where the vote of the American people is less important than the structure of power in the House, there is a huge gap.

One of the things I hope we will do is look at how this House could be run if the Democrats wanted to be bipartisan. One of the first steps toward that, frankly, is the Republican rules package being offered today. Because we have been in the minority so long, because we are in a position to look at what power does and how power is abused, because literally we have to go back to 1954 to find any Republican running a committee, setting up a schedule, hiring a majority staff, or serving as chairman, there has been a long process now of what will be 35 years this year, 36 years by the end of this Congress, of the Democrats holding power.

What I want to challenge my friends in the Democratic Party to do is to look seriously at the Speaker's speech and decide—was it just flimflam, or are you serious? Do you truly want bipartisanship, which would mean fair rules, fair scheduling, and fair staffing, or in fact is this just good propaganda?

Then, second, I would challenge the news media to recognize that while the Presidency is easy to cover, the budget, arguments over the fabric of the law, the structure of power over the bureaucracy, those fundamental decisions about how the Government runs are very often decided far more in the House than in the Senate or in the White House, and that while it is harder and more complicated to tell the story of legislation as it evolves from subcommittee to committee, as it goes from committee to the Rules Committee, as it comes to the floor under what are very often, very bizarre and archane procedures, while that is difficult to explain in the age of 9-second sound bites and 14-second stories, it is hard to understand.

This particular drama that is begun today, this particular process is vital. It is a key part of the constitutional freedoms and the decisions being made today and in coming weeks about whether power is to be shared fairly and in true bipartisanship, or whether power is in fact to be extorted by the majority purely on its behalf in a highly partisan manner, those decisions are real, they are vital, and they shape the entire coming Congress.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remaining time on our side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this vote will set the tone for the 101st Congress. It will tell us, both Democrats and Republicans, what we can expect from each other as we attempt to deal with the problems and the opportunities that lie before the America of the 1990's. And it will tell the American people what they can expect from us.

You know and I know, Mr. Speaker, and increasingly the American people know, that how we do things here often determines what we do. If we restrict the right of our Members to offer amendments to legislation brought to us by the leadership, we restrict the right of the people to be represented and we increase the possibility that legislation will be passed which they would not want and which we would not pass in an open forum with the right to amend and debate. If we do not record the votes of Members on bills that tax or spend, we make it easier both to tax more and to spend more, because we can do so without being held accountable.

Mr. Speaker, every parliamentary body needs rules which permit it to operate efficiently. But we have gone beyond the requirements of efficiency and have become secretive; we have gone beyond the requirements of efficiency to limit the ability of the American people to hold us responsible; we have gone beyond the requirements of efficiency to restrict deliberation and debate and public accountability. We are today beginning the second century of this, the people's Congress. We must, Mr. Speaker, set ourselves right.

We in this Congress are great reformers, Mr. Speaker. We have plans to reform business, to reform the military, to reform every department and every agency, to reform how people drive, what they eat. We have plans to reform everything except that one thing which needs reform the most—the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, for heaven's sake, look at what we're doing. Of the 27 committees in the last Congress, 22 of them allowed people to vote without even being there, allowed committee chairmen to decide on important legislation by voting the proxies of Members who had in some cases not even heard the discussion, and yet were now determining the fate of legislation affecting millions of Americans.

In fact, 18 of the 27 committees have allowed as few as one-third of the members of those committees to make final decisions about what legislation will come to the House floor.

And what happens when those bills come to the House floor? In the last Congress, 43 percent of the legislation we considered came to us under restrictive rules which limited the aiblity of Members to bring up amendments for consideration.

Over half our bills last year were considered under procedures which either set aside the Budget Act—a law we passed—or prohibited points of order to allow the House to do things which would otherwise be in violation of our own rules.

No, Mr. Speaker, we've gone way too far. Now it's time to reform the House of Representatives. I am asking Members to vote no on the previous question so we can offer a package of real rules changes, real reforms in the way we do business. If we do not succeed, I will then offer a motion to commit the rules proposal to a special committee to report back a plan to require advance notice before you can bring to the floor any legislation on which the right of the people's representatives to debate and amend would be restricted.

Our substitute would eliminate proxy voting and require quorums to conduct committee business. It would restrict the number of committee meetings that could be closed. It would require advance notice of rules that would restrict the right to offer amendment. It would cut down on the automatic passage of legislation simply by passing a rule. It would require us to follow the law by restricting the use of waivers and it would require automatic rollcall votes on bills that would spend the taxpayers' money or raise their taxes.

Let us straighten out our own act, Mr. Speaker. Let us vote no on the previous question and take up some real reform here in our own House.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, what if the House of Representatives threw a big, bicentennial birthday party this year, and forgot to invite the people? Wouldn't that take the cake? Can you imagine—celebrating the 200th anniversary of the people's House without the people? Wasn't that what the American Revolution was all about: restoring the people's right to a representative form of government?

Well, as absurd as this birthday invitation scenario might sound, it's not far from the truth. Something very similar has been happening around here over the last decade: the people are slowly and subtly being evicted from their own House.

How could that be? Well, it seems the House got a little fed up with the democratic reform revolution of the seventies when powers became so dispersed that we became legislatively anemic. And so, a counterrevolution took hold in this decade in which powers were reconcentrated in the majority leadership.

Just think: in two decades time we've moved from committee government to subcommittee government and individual enterprise, to a high-powered oligarchy of rule by a few. Members of this House have abdicated more and more of their legislative powers to the majority leadership, all for the appearance of order, efficiency, and results.

But, what have we sacrificed in the process? What have we lost? Quite simply, we are losing the representative and deliberative nature of this body—the very heart of our democratic system. We are forfeiting a very valuable birthright—the people's birthright of representative government.

Do you think this all sounds a bit exaggerated? Well, maybe it does—until, that is, you consider the facts. And the fact is that is that while the number of measures reported from our committees is down roughly 48 percent from 20 years ago and 31 percent from 10 years ago, the number of substantive laws is only down 25 percent and 22 percent, respectively. Put another way, we are enacting far more unreported, substantive measures.

But, not only do the people's Representatives have less and less influence at the committee level on the laws being enacted; even those bills that are reported are increasingly suspect from a representative standpoint. Thanks to proxy voting, one-third quorum rules, unrepresentative party ratios, and downright poor attendance levels, legislation is increasingly the product of a select few subcommittee chairmen and their allies, and not of the whole committee. And, even then, bills are often changed after being reported from committee by the substitution of leadership alternatives in the Rules Committee.

But, you might ask, can't Members improve a bad bill with amendments once it reaches the House floor? The short answer is, "Good luck!" The House is becoming increasingly less democratic there as well. Whereas 10 years ago 28 percent of all public measures were considered in the Committee of the Whole where amendments may be offered, in the 99th Congress only 14 percent or half that number were considered there.

But, even of those public measures considered in the Committee of the Whole under special rules, an increasing number are considered under a restrictive amendment process—up from 12 percent 10 years ago to 43 percent in the last Congress. In short, Members have less opportunity to amend fewer and fewer bills on the House floor. Again, the American people are being effectively disenfranchised; their vote is being wasted.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is evident from the facts that what is called for is a bicentennial mandate to restore the people's House. We are becoming too much like the House was in 1910 when Speaker Cannon was stripped of his chairmanship of the Rules Committee because of his autocratic abuse of power. Here's how minority leader Champ Clark explained it then:

> This is a fight against the system. We think it has been a bad system * * . It does not make any difference to me that it has been sanctified by time. * * The fact that the Speaker of the House was chairman * * * of the Committee on Rules gives the Speaker * * * more power than any one man ought to have over the destinies of this Republic.

Clark went on to say that it was a "revolution" they were working that day, but, in his words, "We are fighting to rehabilitate the House of Repesentatives and to restore it to its ancient place of honor and prestige in our system of government." And the Democratic floor leader concluded as follows:

> You can not restore to the membership of this House the quantum of power that each Member is entitled to without taking from the Speaker of the House some quantum of the power he now enjoys, because he practically enjoys it all.

Mr. Speaker, we find ourselves in a very similar situation today. Today the Speaker again virtually controls the Rules Committee which increasingly deprives Members of their right to shape legislation. We are fighting to restore to those Members the quantum of power to which they are entitled, and to restore the people's House to its ancient place of prestige and honor.

We can have a responsible committee system that is both responsive to party leadership and representative of a House majority. Let's join today in a truly bipartisan, bicentennial reform effort.

A BICENTENNIAL MANDATE: TO RESTORE THE PEOPLE'S HOUSE

(A Summary of the Republican House Rules Substitute for H. Res. 5, Offered by Rep. Edwards of Oklahoma, Opening Day, 101st Congress, January 3, 1989)

The rules of the House of the 100th Congress would be adopted as the rules of the 101st Congress with the following amendments:

(1) Veto Messages.—Immediately after the reading of a veto message, the Speaker would be required to state the question on the reconsideration of the vetoed bill, without intervening motion, thereby giving the House a chance to vote immediately on overriding the veto.

(2) Broadcast Coverage.—The Speaker would be required to provide uniform visual broadcast coverage of the House throughout the day which could include periodic views of the entire Chamber if they do not detract from the person speaking.

(3) House Scheduling Reform.—The Speaker would be required at the beginning of each session to announce a legislative program for the session that would include target dates for the consideration of major legislation, weeks in which the House would be in session (with full, five-day work weeks assumed unless otherwise indicated), district work periods, and the target date for adjournment. The Speaker would also be required to consult with the minority leader in developing each week's legislative program.

(4) Oversight Reform.—Committees would be required to formally adopt and submit to the House Administration Committee by March 1st of the first session their oversight plans for that Congress. It would not be in order to consider the funding resolution for any committee which does not submit its oversight plans as required. The House Administration Committee, after consultation with the majority and minority leaders, would report the plans to the House by March 15th together with its recommendations, and those of the joint leadership group to assure coordination between committees. The Speaker would be authorized to appoint ad hoc oversight committees for specific tasks from the membership of committees with shared jurisdiction. Committees would be required to include an oversight section in their final activity report at the end of a Congress.

(5) Multiple Referral of Legislation.—The joint referral of bills to two or more committees would be abolished, while split and sequential referrals would be retained, subject to time limits and designation by the Speaker of a committee of principal jurisdiction.

(6) Early Committee Organization.—Committees must be elected within seven legislative days of the convening of a new Congress and must hold their organization meeting not later than three legislative days after their election.

(7) Committee Ratios.—The party ratios on committees would be required to reflect that of the full House (except for the Standards Committee which is bipartisan). The requirement would extend to select and conference committees as well.

(8) Subcommittee Limits.—No committee (except Appropriations) could have more than six subcommittees, and no Member could have more than four subcommittee assignments.

(9) Proxy Voting Ban.—All proxy voting on committees would be prohibited.

(10) Open Committee Meetings.—Committee meetings, which can now be closed for any reason, could only be closed for national security, personal privacy or personnel reasons.

(11) Majority Quorums.—A majority of the membership of a committee would be required for the transaction of any business.

(12) Report Accountability.—Committee reports on bills would be required to include the names of those members voting for and against reporting a bill or, in the case of a nonrecord vote, the names of those members actually present when the bill is ordered reported.

(13) Same Day Consideration of Rules Committee Reports.—An order of business resolution from the Committee on Rules could not be considered on the same calendar day as reported, or the subsequent calendar day of the same legislative day, except by a two-thirds vote of the House.

(14) Permitting Instructions in Motion to Recommit.—The Rules Committee could not report an order of business resolution which prevented a motion to recommit, including one with amendatory instructions.

(15) Restrictive Rule Limitation.—It would not be in order to consider any order of business resolution from the Rules Committee restricting the right of Members to offer germane amendments unless the chairman of the Committee orally announces to the House, at least four legislative days before the Rules Committee meeting on the matter, that less than an open rule might be recommended by the committee.

(16) Limitation on Self-Executing Rules.—It would not be in order to consider any order of business resolution from the Rules Committee that provides for the automatic passage of any bill, joint resolution or conference report, or adoption of any motion, amendment, or resolution, except by a two-thirds House vote on agreeing to such consideration.

(17) Budget Waivers.—Any report from the Committee on Rules on a resolution waiving any provisions of the Budget Act against any bill would be required to include an explanation and justification of the waiver together with a summary or text of any comments received from the Budget Committee regarding the waiver. A separate vote could be demanded on any such waiver in a rule, subject to the requisite votes required by the Budget Act for such a waiver. Blanket waiver rules would require a two-thirds vote for consideration.

(18) Committee Staffing.—Committee funding resolutions could not be considered until the House has first adopted a resolution from the House Administration Committee setting an overall limit on committee staffing for the session. The minority would be entitled up to one-third of the investigative staff funds, on request. The overall committee staff limit for the 101st Congress could not be more than 90% of the total at the end of the 100th Congress.

(19) Commemorative Calendar.—A Commemorative Calendar would be created on which unreported commemoratives would be placed at the written request of the chairman and ranking minority member of the Post Office Committee. The Calendar would be called twice a month and any two objections would cause a commemorative to be removed from the Calendar.

(20) Automatic Roll Call Votes.—Automatic roll call votes would be required on final passage of appropriations, tax and Member pay raise bills and conference reports, and on final adoption of budget resolutions and conference reports containing debt limit increases.

(21) Appropriations Reforms.—The present restrictions on offering limitations amendments to appropriations bills would be abolished. Short-term continuing appropriations (30-days or less) could only provide for the lesser spending amounts and more restrictive authority as provided in either the House or Senate passed bills, the conference agreement, or the previous year's Act, and a three-fifth House vote would be required to waive this requirement. Long-term continuing appropriations measures (more than 30-days) would be required to contain the full text of the provisions to be enacted; the present prohibition on legislative language and unauthorized matters in appropriations measures would be extended to long-term CRs. Points of order and amendments to provisions in long-term CRs not previously agreed to by the House could only be denied by a three-fifths vote. Cost estimates would be required in reports on long-term CRs. Reports on all general appropriations bills, including long-term CRs would be required to include not only a listing of legislative provisions contained in the measures (as presently required), but of all unauthorized activities being funded by the measure.

(22) Reconciliation Limitation.—It would not be in order to report in a reconciliation bill, or consider as an amendment thereto, a provision which is not related to a committee's reconciliation instructions to either reduce spending or raise revenues. Determination would be made by the Budget Committee.

(23) Authorization Reporting Deadline.—It would not be in order to consider any bill authorizing budget authority for a fiscal year if reported after May 15 preceding the beginning of the fiscal year (former Budget Act requirement).

(24) Pledge of Allegiance.—The Pledge of Allegiance would be required as the second order of business each day.

(25) Suspension of the Rules.—Measures could not be considered under the suspension of the rules procedure except by direction of the committee(s) of jurisdiction or on the request of the chairman and ranking minority member of such committee(s). No measure could be considered under suspension which authorizes or appropriates more than $50 million for any fiscal year. Notice of any suspension must be placed in the Congressional Record at least one day in advance of its consideration together with the text of any amendment to be offered to it. No constitutional amendment could be considered under suspension.

(26) Discharge Motions.—The Clerk of the House would be required to publish in the Congressional Record the names of those Members signing a discharge petition once a threshhold of 100 signatures as been reached, and to publish an updated list of names at the end of each succeeding week.

(27) Inclusion of Views With Conference Reports.—Members of conference committees would be permitted three calendar days in which to file supplemental, minority, or addition views to be published with conference reports.

(28) Special Rescission Authority.—The Committees on Rules and Government Operations would be directed to report by May 30, 1989, legislation giving the President authority to rescind budget authority for which an authorization has not been enacted, unless Congress enacts a joint resolution disapproving the rescission within 45-days. If the committees do not report, automatic discharge of the first such bill introduced is provided.

(29) Applicability of Certain Laws to Congress.—The appropriate committees of Congress would be required to report, not later than June 30, 1989, legislation applying certain Federal health, safety, labor and civil rights laws to Congress. Automatic discharge is provided for the first such comprehensive bill if they do not all report.

(30) Realignment of Committee Jurisdiction.—The Committee on Rules would be required to report no later than Dec. 1, 1989, a more rational and functional jurisdictional system for House committees to eliminate overlap, duplication and inefficiencies.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

MOTION TO COMMIT OFFERED BY MR. EDWARDS OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to commit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion to Commit offered by Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma: Mr. EDWARDS moves to commit the resolution H. Res. 5 to a select committee to be comprised of the Majority Leader and the Minority Leader with instructions to report back the same to the House forthwith with only the following amendment:

At the end of the resolution, add the following new paragraph:

RESTRICTIVE RULE LIMITATION

"(15) In Rule XI, clause 4 is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"(e) It shall not be in order to consider any resolution reported from the Committee on Rules providing for the consideration of any bill or resolution otherwise subject to amendment under House rules if that resolution limits the right of Members to offer germane amendments to such bill or resolution unless the chairman of the Committee on Rules has orally announced in the House, at least four legislative days prior to the scheduled consideration of such matter by the Committee on Rules, that less than an open amendment process might be recommended by the Committee for the consideration of such bill or resolution.".

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding me this time and giving me this opportunity to explain to the Members of the House what we are going to vote on in just a moment.

Mr. Speaker, I have offered a motion to commit to a special committee and to be reported back to the House a provision that would say, and especially the new Members, I want them to listen to this, that if the Committee on Rules is going to report out of the committee and bring to the floor any legislation on which the right to offer amendments would be restricted, any closed rule, any partially closed rule, and understand that last year nearly half of the bills that we considered were under closed or partially closed rule, if that is to be done, the leadership must first notify the House orally, come to the House floor and tell us orally, 4 days in advance so that we in the House will have an ability to know in advance that we are going to be considering important legislation without the right of debate and amendment. That is what we are going to be voting on in just a moment.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for giving me the chance to explain that.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, that makes a tremendous amount of sense. That seems very fair to every Member of the House, and I would hope that we would honor the gentleman's request.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to commit offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

PROVIDING FOR CERTAIN APPOINTMENTS AND PROCEDURES RELATING TO IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I offer three privileged resolutions (H. Res. 12, H. Res. 13, and H. Res. 14), and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resolutions will be considered en bloc.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may state his parliamentary inquiry.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, as I understood it, these resolutions being privileged carry automatically within them debate time, and that time will be granted, is that correct?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] will be recognized for 1 hour and he may yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Without objection, the resolutions will be considered en bloc.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

H. RES. 12

Resolved, That Jack Brooks, John Conyers, Jr., Don Edwards, John Bryant, Hamilton Fish, Jr., and George W. Gekas, Members of the House of Representatives, are appointed managers to conduct the impeachment trial against Alcee L. Hastings, judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida.

H. RES. 13

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the House of Representatives in the matter of the impeachment of Alcee L. Hastings, judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, are authorized to do the following in the preparation and conduct of the impeachment trail:

(1) To employ legal, clerical, and other necessary assistance and to incur such expenses as may be necessary. Expenses under this paragraph shall be paid out of the funds available to the Committee on the Judiciary under clause 5(f) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives on vouchers approved by the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

(2) To send for persons and papers, and to file with the Secretary of the Senate, on the part of the House of Representatives, any subsequent pleadings which they consider necessary.

(3) To take such other actions as are necessary to the preparation or conduct of the trail.

H. RES. 14

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate to inform the Senate that Jack Brooks, John Conyers, Jr., Don Edwards, John Bryant, Hamilton Fish, Jr., and George W. Gekas, have been appointed managers for the trial of the impeachment of Alcee L. Hastings, judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida.

Mr. BROOKS (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, these three resolutions are necessary in order for the House to proceed with the impeachment trial of Judge Alcee L. Hastings. As the members are aware, the House voted to impeach Judge Hastings in August 1988. The Senate was not able to schedule a trial before the conclusion of the 100th Congress.

Under the precedents, the impeachment itself is not discontinued by the adjournment of the Congress. The House must, however, appoint managers for the conduct of the trial in the 101st Congress, advise the Senate of the appointment of those managers, and authorize those managers to expend funds, to employ staff, send for persons and papers, and to take such other actions as are necessary for the conduct of the trial.

These three resolutions accomplish those objectives. I would point out to my colleagues that these are the resolutions which are customarily adopted by the House, subsequent to an impeachment.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. I yield to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is absolutely correct in the chronology that he has outlined for these resolutions. What I wanted to point out for the record is that when the Committee on the Judiciary of the House began the impeachment proceedings in the 100th Congress, it did so with a kind of pressing timetable. First, it was important to expedite the proceedings for the sake of the impeachment proceedings themselves because of their importance. Second, naturally, it would be very important for the target of the impeachment, who is entitled to what would be considered on the House floor, if not in court, to a speedy trial, as it were.

Third, what concerned me until today—and it has been made a part of the RECORD now, but we did concern ourselves with it at that particular time—is this: What if we were not able to finish the impeachment proceedings during the 100th Congress? If we did not speed that process up to such a degree, we felt, to get it to the Senate for trial before we finished the 100th Congress, would we be in danger of losing the entire Congress and having to begin all over again in the 101st Congress?

The resolution today makes amply clear that the Senate of the United States, being a continuing body, really never goes out of existence, so if the impeachment proceedings were begun and ended on the part of the House during one term of Congress and the Senate becomes the repository of that impeachment proceeding for the purpose of trial, then it can postpone trial until a later time, not harming the constitutional requirement of how an impeachment ought to go.

So these three resolutions carry on where we left off in the 100th Congress, and I really appreciate the gentleman's bringing this up so quickly so we do not have to worry about it any more and so we can proceed with the proceedings when they return in the Senate.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONTINUATION OF PROVISIONS OF FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES RESOLUTION

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 15) and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 15

Resolved, That, effective January 3, 1989, the provisions of House Resolution 558, One Hundredth Congress, shall remain in effect for the duration of the One Hundred First Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so for the purpose of yielding to the distinguished gentleman from California to tell us the purpose of his resolution.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to reauthorize without change the Fair Employment Practices Resolution which was adopted by the House last October by a vote of 408 to 12.

The resolution applies basic civil rights protection to the employees of the House of Representatives and is the product of contributions by the authors of employee protection legislation introduced in the 100th Congress by Chairman HAWKINS, Representatives MARTIN of Illinois, BARTLETT, and SCHROEDER, and many others who worked together to bring this resolution into place.

The resolution provides for protection against discrimination. It also establishes an office of Fair Employment Practices along with the process to basically enforce those requirements.

I should point out for the Members that the Fair Employment Practices Office did open its doors on November 3, 1988, and is currently operating out of room 101 in House Annex No. 1. Bill Baranoski was appointed by Chairman ANNUNZIO and Mr. FRENZEL as the acting director last November, and it is my understanding that that office has notified all offices in the House of its operation and has handled a number of inquiries over the past 2 months.

The purpose of this resolution is to again reinforce the important steps the House took last October and to continue the effort we have begun in providing protection for civil rights to employees of the House.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I concur in the statement of the distinguished gentleman from California and believe that this landmark resolution must be extended if we are to provide antidiscrimination protection for the employees of the House of Representatives.

I would add, in addition, however, that this does not mean that the committees will not be seeking a more permanent solution to the problem. What we have is a temporary one, but it is important that this office be extended. I congratulate the gentleman from California and the people he mentioned who have been very instrumental in putting this together in the first instance.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the resolution just agreed to.

EXPRESSING SORROW OF THE HOUSE AT THE DEATH OF HON. BILL NICHOLS, REPRESENTATIVE FROM THE STATE OF ALABAMA

Resolved, That when the House adjourns today, it adjourn as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, let me say that I am not prepared to speak in eulogy of our departed colleague and my very dear friend at this time. I simply take this opportunity to inform the Members of the House that this particular Member, who died during the recess and who is such a dear friend to all of us, so well liked, so well respected; I know that there are a great number of people who would like to participate in a special order in memorial to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. NICHOLS], and so I would like to take this opportunity to say that as soon as we get back in session after January 20 that it is my intent as dean of the delegation to ask for such special order and that all of the Members of the House will be notified of that special order in ample time for them to prepare for it. I know that this will evoke a very large response.

STATUS OF INQUIRY INTO DISTURBING PATTERN OF DEATH AMONG NAVAL SERVICEMEN WHILE IN TRAINING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to report to my colleagues on the status of the inquiry into a disturbing pattern of deaths among Navy servicemen while undergoing training. This inquiry began last spring as the result of irregularities that came to my attention surrounding the tragic death of Airman Lee Mirecki, of Appleton, WI. In looking into the matter, I discovered that 16 other Navy men had died since January 1986 while undergoing training. In six of these cases, involving young men at the peak of physical fitness, death was attributed to heart problems.

Having obtained this information, last June I asked for a two-pronged investigation. On June 8, I asked the Comptroller General, to determine what really happened to Lee Mirecki and the other 16 men, and how this pattern of one death every 8 weeks could have occurred. The entire Wisconsin congressional delegation joined me in that request.

On June 21, this House agreed to my amendment to the fiscal year 1989 Defense appropriations bill, requiring a report from the Secretary of Defense on the causes and circumstances of all Navy training deaths since 1985, and the measures he and the Navy Secretary are taking to prevent further deaths. Subsequently, with the help of Senator Proxmire, the other body agreed to my amendment and it was included in the final version of the DOD Appropriations Act.

These two initiatives were carefully undertaken to provide the Congress with a thorough examination of safety in Navy training. My goal is to have two separate reports—first by the Department responsible for overseeing the Navy and the second by our independent investigative agency—to give us two views of this serious situation. With these reports, we should obtain an agenda for improving safety and preventing needless deaths.

Since the 100th Congress adjourned into October, there have been several important developments which my colleagues should note. First, the GAO has responded with a substantial investigation. On December 7, the GAO team conducted a briefing for me and the Wisconsin delegation. They reported finding serious safety problems in Navy training and systemic inadequacies in the Navy's management of safety in its training courses. Specifically, the GAO found:

Inadequate assessment of candidates for the Navy's rescue swimmer school,

Inadequate selection and training of instructors for high-risk courses, and Inadequate safety precautions and emergency medical procedures.

Significantly, in four of the other deaths aside from Lee Mirecki's, lack of emergency medical responses and failure to follow safety procedures were factors.

Perhaps most shocking was GAO's finding that in all four of the Navy investigations of Lee Mirecki's death, there had been a complete failure to look into the reports of a coverup of the truth. Statements about a coverup began circulating immediately after Lee Mirecki's death—statements that reached his family, reached me and the news media. Yet the Navy failed to look into those statements. The final GAO report, due in mid-February, will have further details on this incredible dereliction.

Having received GAO's very disturbing findings, I immediately provided this information to Navy officials, and requested a meeting with Defense Secretary Carlucci to discuss his report, which was due on December 31.

For nearly 3 weeks, I heard nothing from Secretary Carlucci's office, despite both telephone and written requests for a meeting. Finally, last Thursday, I was informed that an Assistant Secretary, Mr. Grant Green, would be available to see me. I agreed and met with him last Friday.

With the statutorily required report due the next day, I asked to review its contents. What I was given was a nine-page recitation of the 17 deaths, the barest details of the causes of death, and a sketchy description of supposed improvements in safety procedures.

Frankly, I found the report indecipherable and inadequate. Our congressional mandate was clear: To report on the causes and circumstances of these deaths and report on what was done to prevent further deaths.

My first impression of the DOD report was confirmed when, in the course of the meeting, I learned that the Navy had come to many of the same conclusions as had the GAO team, and that a broad review of safety was underway. Yet nowhere in the DOD report was there a mention of these findings. Assistant Secretary Green and his staff had no explanation for this serious omission.

Mr. Green agreed that the report did not meet the requirements and suggested that the document be submitted as an "interim report." Although the statute does not contemplate an incomplete report, I agreed to accept it, on the condition that the Defense Department finish the job.

That is where the inquiry stands today. On the one hand we have findings by the GAO team that Navy training is still not as safe as it should be, and that Navy investigative procedures are faulty. On the other, we have an unfortunate record of consistently inadequate response by the Navy, and a failure thus far by the Defense Department to look closely at what has occurred in its subordinate agency.

What makes this matter so serious is that the Lee Mirecki tragedy could occur again. Young men and women who commit themselves to defending our country should be trained well and adequately, but that training should not put their lives at needless risk.

Moreover, the American people, and especially the families of those who give their lives in military service, must have confidence that they are told the truth about those tragedies. As one Member of Congress, I will not rest until the military brass fulfill their duty and restore that trust, which their failures have damaged.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Energy and Commerce:

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, January 3, 1989.)

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). The Chair wishes to make a statement on behalf of and at the request of the Speaker.

While the Chair ordinarily takes this occasion on opening day of a Congress to announce his policies with respect to particular aspects of the legislative process, including the introduction and referral of bills, recognition for unanimous consent requests of various sorts, and privileges of the floor, the Chair will at this time at the beginning of the 101st Congress in the year of the bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution, preface those announcements with a general statement concerning decorum in the House of Representatives.

It is essential that the dignity of the proceedings of the House be preserved, not only to assure that the House conducts its business in an orderly fashion but to permit Members to properly comprehend and participate in the business of the House. To this end, and in order to permit the Chair to understand and to correctly put the question on the numerous requests that are made by Members, the Chair requests that Members and others who have the privileges of the floor desist from audible conversation in the Chamber while the business of the House is being conducted. The Chair would encourage all Members to review rule XIV to gain a better understanding of the proper rules of decorum expected of them, and especially:

First, to avoid "personalities" in debate with respect to references to other Members, the Senate, and the President; second, to address the Chair while standing and only when and not beyond the time recognized, and not to address the television or other imagined audience; third, to refrain from passing between the Chair and the Member speaking, or directly in front of a Member speaking from the well; to refrain from smoking in the Chamber; and generally to display the same degree of respect to the Chair and other Members that every Member is due.

The Chair will insert in the RECORD an announcement from the Speaker concerning: First, privileges of the floor; second, introduction of bills and resolutions; third, requests for committees to sit during the 5-minute rule; fourth, unanimous consent requests for the consideration of bills and resolutions; and fifth, recognition for 1-minute speeches and special orders. This announcement where appropriate will indicate verbatim the origin of the stated policy and the date thereof, and will show that the Speaker intends to continue the policy reflected in that statement in the 101st Congress.

PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR

The Speaker's announced instructions to the Doorkeeper and Sergeant at Arms in the 98th Congress on January 25, 1983, and in the 99th Congress on January 21, 1986, regarding strict enforcement of rule XXXII, specifying those persons having the privileges of the floor during sessions of the House, will be applied during the 101st Congress.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER, JANUARY 25, 1983

The SPEAKER. Rule XXXII strictly limits those persons to whom the privileges of the floor during sessions of the House are extended, and that rule prohibits the Chair from entertaining requests for suspension or waiver of that rule. As reiterated as recently as August 22, 1974, by Speaker Albert under the principle stated in Deschler's Procedure, chapter 4, section 3.4, the rule strictly limits the number of committee staff permitted on the floor at one time during the consideration of measures reported from their committees. This permission does not extend to Members' personal staff except when a Member has an amendment actually pending during the 5-minute rule. To this end, the Chair requests all Members and committee staff to cooperate to assure that not more than the proper number of staff are on the floor, and then only during the actual consideration of measures reported from their committees.

The Chair will again extend this admonition to all properly admitted majority and minority staff by insisting that their presence on the floor, including the areas behind the rail, be restricted to those periods during which their supervisors have specifically requested their presence. The Chair stated this policy in the 97th Congress, and an increasing number of Members have insisted on strict enforcement of the rule. The Chair has consulted with and has the concurrence of the minority leader with respect to this policy and has directed the Doorkeeper and the Sergeant at Arms to assure proper enforcement of the rule.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER, JANUARY 21, 1986

The SPEAKER. Rule XXXII strictly limits those persons to whom the privileges of the floor during sessions of the house are extended, and that rule prohibits the Chair from entertaining request for suspension or waiver of that rule. As reiterated by the Chair on January 25, 1983, and January 3, 1985, and as stated in chapter 4, section 3.4 of Deschler-Brown's Procedure in the house of Representatives, the rule strictly limits the number of committee staff on the floor at one time during the consideration of measures reported from their committees. This permission does not extend to Members' personal staff except when a Member's amendment is actually pending during the 5-minute rule. It also does not extend to personal staff of members who are sponsors of pending bills or who are engaging in special orders. The Chair requests the cooperation of all Members and committee staff to assure that only the proper number of staff are on the floor, and then only during the consideration of measures reported from their committees.

The Chair is making this statement and reiterating this policy because of concerns expressed by many Members about the number of committee staff on the floor during the last weeks of the first session.

The Chair requests each chairman, and each ranking minority member, to submit to the Doorkeeper a list of staff who are to be allowed on the floor during the consideration of a measure reported by their committee. Each staff person should exchange his or her ID for a "committee staff" badge which is to be worn while on the floor. The Chair has consulted with the minority leader and will continue to consult with him. The Chair has furthermore directed the Doorkeeper and the Sergeant at Arms to assure proper enforcement of rule XXXII.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

The Chair would also announce that the Speaker's statement in the 98th Congress on January 3, 1983, regarding signing of bills and resolutions, his determination of committee jurisdiction on a joint or sequential basis, and regarding the Speaker's discretionary authority to refer nongermane Senate amendments to House bills to the committees of appropriate jurisdiction, will continue to apply in the 101st Congress.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER, JANUARY 3, 1983

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to make a statement concerning the introduction and reference of bills and resolutions.

As Members are aware, they have the privilege today of introducing bills. Heretofore on the opening day of a new Congress, several hundred bills have been introduced. The Chair will do his best to refer as many bills as possible, but he will ask the indulgence of Members if he is unable to refer all the bills that may be introduced. Those bills which are not referred and do not apear in the RECORD as of today will be included in the next day's RECORD and printed with a date as of today.

The Chair has advised all officers and employees of the House that are involved in the processing of bills that every bill, resolution, memorial, petition or other material that is placed in the hopper must bear the signature of a Member. Where a bill or resolution is jointly sponsored, the signature must be that of the Member first named thereon. The bill clerk is instructed to return to the Member any bill which appears in the hopper without an original signature. This procedure was inaugurated in the 92nd Congress. It has worked well, and the Chair thinks that it is essential to continue this practice to insure the integrity of the process by which legislation is introduced in the House.

The Chair also desires to announce that pursuant to the authority granted him in rule X, clause 5, he will continue the practice of making referral of bills and resolutions as indicated in the annotations under that clause contained in the House Rules and Manual.

REQUESTS FOR COMMITTEES TO SIT DURING THE 5-MINUTE RULE

The Speaker's guidelines announced during the 98th Congress on March 3, 1983, regarding unanimous consent requests for committees to sit during the 5-minute rule will continue to apply during the 101st Congress.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER, MARCH 3, 1983

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces that he will recognize Members to make requests for committees to sit during the 5-minute rule only at certain times during the legislative day. While the precedents indicate that such requests when pending are not votes requiring the presence of a quorum, the Chair wishes to avoid the need for a call of the House pending such requests but at the same time to assure predictability as to when he will accord recognition. Therefore, the Speaker intends to set up the following guidelines:

First, as has been established by precedent, permission to sit shall require unanimous consent if the permission pertains to a day for which the program has not been announced. Thus, prior to the announcement of the legislative program for the following week, only one objection would be required to prevent a committee from sitting. Following the announcement by the majority leader, or his designee, of the program for the next week, the Chair would entertain requests for committees to sit during the following week and 10 objections would then be required. The Chair wants it to be clearly understood that the first available opportunity in the House following the announcement of the program is an appropriate time for considering requests pertaining to the following week if the announcement comes before the completion of all legislative business.

Second, the Chair will not entertain requests on days when all votes on legislative matters have been postponed to a later date; however, the Chair will accept requests for committee hearings to be held later in the week if the request has the concurrence of the ranking minority member of the committee or subcommittee.

Third, on days when legislative business is to be conducted, and when rollcall votes are in order on legislation, the Chair will recognize during the 1-minute period only when he is assured that the ranking minority member of the committee or subcommittee involved supports the request for the hearings or meeting.

Requests that have been objected to by 10 or more Members pursuant to clause 2(i) of rule XI may not be renewed on the same day unless the Chair is assured that the objections have been withdrawn.

The Chair will in no instance entertain requests after the legislative business of the day has been concluded; that is, after leaves of absence have been laid down or unanimous consent requests from the majority and minority tables have been entertained at the end of the day.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUESTS FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

The Speaker's statement in the 98th Congress on January 25, 1984, with respect to recognition for unanimous-consent requests for the consideration of unreported bills and resolutions and for the consideration of House bills with Senate amendments will apply during the 101st Congress

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER, JANUARY 6, 1987

The SPEAKER. As indicated on page 488 of the House Rules and Manual, the Chair has established a policy of conferring recognition upon Members to permit consideration of bills and resolutions by unanimous consent only when assured that the majority and minority floor leadership and committee and subcommittee chairmen and ranking minority members have no objection. Consistent with that policy, and with the Chair's inherent power of recognition under clause 2, rule XIV, the Chair, and any occupant of the Chair appointed as Speaker pro tempore pursuant to clause 7, rule I, will decline recognition for unanimous consent requests for consideration of bills and resolutions without assurances that the request has been cleared by that leadership. This denial of recognition by the Chair will not reflect necessarily any personal opposition on the part of the Chair to orderly consideration of the matter in question, but will reflect the determination upon the part of the chair that orderly procedures will be followed; that is, procedures involving consultation and agreement between floor and committee leadership on both sides of the aisle.

With respect to unanimous consent requests to dispose of Senate amendments to House bills on the Speaker's table, the Chair will entertain such a request only if made by the chairman of the commitee with jurisdiction, or by another committee member authorized to make the request. (Apr. 26, 1984, p. ; Deschler's Precedents ch. 21, sec. 1.23).

RECOGNITION FOR 1-MINUTE SPEECHES AND SPECIAL ORDERS

The Speaker's statement in the 98th Congress on January 25, 1984 with respect to the Speaker's policy for recognition for 1-minute speeches and special orders, alternating between both sides of the aisle, announced on August 8, 1984, and implemented on September 5, 1984, will apply during the 101st Congress.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER, AUGUST 18, 1984

The SPEAKER. After consultation with and concurrence by the minority leader, the Chair announces that he will institute a new policy of recognition for "1-minute" speeches and for special order requests. The Chair will alternate recognition for 1-minute speeches between majority and minority Members, in the order in which they seek recognition in the well under present practice from the Chair's right to the Chair's left, with possible exceptions for Members of the leadership and Members having business requests. The Chair, of course, reserves the right to limit 1-minute speeches to a certain period of time or to a special place in the program on any given day, with notice to the leadership.

With respect to recognition for "special order speeches" at the end of legislative business of the day, the Chair will recognize first those Members who wish to address the House for 5 minutes or less, alternating between majority and minority members, otherwise in the order in which those permissions were granted in the House. Thereafter, the Chair will recognize those Members who wish to address the House for longer than 5 minutes up to 1 hour, alternating between majority and minority members in the order in which those permissions were granted by the House.

Thus, all Members can continue to obtain permissions to address the House In the same ways as are presently utilized, either by requests made by the acting majority and minority leaders at the end of the day through their respective Cloakrooms or by individual requests agreed to on the floor for that day or for a future day. For the request to be entertained, it should state "permission to address the House at the conclusion of legislative business, consistent with the Speaker's announced policy of recognition." Thus, Members should be on notice that a special order for more than 5 minutes, although agreed to at a prior time, may be preceded by a series of special orders of 5 minutes or less, or by a longer special order of a Member of the other party.

Further refinements of this policy based upon experience may be announced by the Chair in the future after consultation with the minority leader.

CAMPAIGN FINANCING REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, this new Congress will have many important tasks to undertake, much work to do, and a long and difficult road to travel. In the coming months, we will all need to work together; majority and minority, liberal and conservative, urban and rural, north and south, east and west. We cannot delay in our work, nor can we put off doing that which must be done.

One of the most important issues before us is the question of political campaign financing. I am keenly aware of the differences of opinion that exist in this body, in the Congress, and indeed, in the Nation, as to what must be done. But there is no doubt that the way we raise money and spend money for political campaigns is in question more today than ever before. There is no question that something must be done. My leaders in this House, and the leaders of the other party agree with me. Campaign financing reform is at the top of our agenda.

I am also very much aware that every Member is an expert in this matter. We all have to raise money; we all have to spend money; and we all know instinctively what the laws ought to be. For every proposal, there will be 434 counterproposals. For every measure proposed as reform there will be the criticism that it either goes too far, or doesn't go far enough. Every proposal will be greeted with partisan acclaim or scorn. There will be advocates to preserve every existing loophole.

But, in the end, I am confident that the 101st Congress will enact some meaningful legislation—not because it helps incumbents or challengers; not because it preserves the status quo or makes revolutionary changes—but because it is needed and because the people demand it.

In the course of recent elections, a number of abuses have been reported by citizen groups and the media. They deal with unfair, or loaded financial regulation which assures the return of incumbents; with excessive influence purchased by political action committees; with large amounts of unreported money disappearing into State and local organizations; and with inflated campaign expenditures which all but price new candidates out of the campaigns. These are serious matters, and they demand our most serious consideration.

As chairman of the Committee on House Administration, I will have the responsibility to see to it that the House has an opportunity to consider these matters, and to improve the campaign financing system. Our Subcommittee on Elections, ably led by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT] is already at work. I am setting these issues as the first priority for our full committee.

We are today introducing several bills to begin the process.

We have developed several bills rather than one omnibus bill because I know that some areas will be the subject of vigorous debate. Sometimes, in such complex matters, it is better to reduce them to a series of simple bills each dealing with part of the problem. That way, we can work out legislation that can be enacted, rather than legislation that is for show only.

I do not pretend that I have all the final answers; I do not hold myself out as the country's greatest expert on campaign finance. But I do know that this Congress is ready to legislate, and I am ready to begin.

The bills we introduce today cover several areas of campaigning and campaign financing which, taken together, represent real reform and improvement. The bills deal with some of the issues which have been raised during the past several campaigns.

My first bill, which Mr. SWIFT is cosponsoring, deals with soft money. That is a term that has been prominent in the press lately. It has different meanings to various groups. It describes political money that does not appear to fall under existing law, because it is not directly associated with Federal elections. It has a great indirect influence, however, and the public is entitled to know where it comes from, where it goes, and how it is used. Chairman SWIFT and I believe that the bill I am introducing today will go a long way toward achieving a better understanding of soft money, and bring it under appropriate regulation.

My second bill, also cosponsored by Mr. SWIFT, deals with the questionable practice of bundling, which permits the assembly of large numbers of contributions into a bundle, so as to exert maximum influence on the recipient. This is wrong, and we ought to stop it.

A third bill, by Mr. SWIFT, which I am pleased to cosponsor, would revise the way in which we regulate the operation and financing of campaigns. It would improve the regulation of multicandidate political committees, or PAC's. It would provide reduced costs for radio and television time and for campaign mailings.

A fourth bill, which has passed the House before, would set a uniform time for closing the polls across the country, so that early announcements would not discourage voters from turning out in the Western time zones.

Mr. SWIFT and I are also introducing a voter registration bill which would simplify the process of registering to vote in Federal elections.

I hope that my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will join me in sponsoring these bills. I know that the process of subcommittee consideration and markup, and full committee markup will in all probability improve and strengthen them. It is my intention to seek the earliest possible subcommittee consideration of these and other bills in our jurisdiction and to report them promptly to the floor.

Additional legislation will be proposed by others. I would expect, for example, legislation to reestablish a tax credit for political contributions, along with bills to deal with other perceived flaws in the present system.

This Congress has a mandate for reforming campaign financing. I urge all my colleagues to study these bills carefully, and to support them. I can assure you that the Committee on House Administration takes its responsibility seriously, that it will listen carefully to the suggestions of all Members, and that it will act both responsibly and promptly.

FIRST TIME HOMEBUYERS' ACT OF 1989

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KLECZKA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation designed to help young persons make that all-important first home purchase.

Homeownership, as many of my colleagues are aware, is on the decline. A recent Congressional Research Service report noted that while the homeownership rate rose from 44 percent in the 1940 census to 65.6 percent in 1980, that rate had declined to 63.7 percent in the first half of 1988.

For first-time homebuyers, the need is especially acute. National Association of Realtors president Nestor R. Weigand, Jr., noted in the November 15, 1988, Washington Post that "housing affordability for first time buyers, compared to those for the overall homebuying public, has deteriorated to the worst point in 13 years, and we don't think the situation will remedy itself."

In the Midwest, the decline in homeownership among younger persons is especially pronounced. At this point, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a table compiled by the Joint Center for Housing Studies of Harvard University which indicates that decline:

The material follows:

HOMEOWNERSHIP RATE BY REGION AND AGE: 1973 to 1987

[In percent]

Region and age	1973	1976	1980	1983	1987
Midwest	69.1	69.5	70.3	70.0	67.1

HOMEOWNERSHIP RATE BY REGION AND AGE: 1973 to 1987—Continued

[In percent]

Region and age	1973	1976	1980	1983	1987
25 to 29	47.9	48.6	50.5	43.5	40.2
35 to 39	76.0	77.5	78.0	74.0	69.7
40 to 44	79.2	81.3	80.7	81.6	73.3
55 to 64	79.6	82.4	83.1	85.0.	84.2
75 plus	71.8	70.0	69.0	74.7	70.1

One of the biggest roadblocks to first-time home purchase, especially for younger families, is the downpayment. Many potential purchasers can afford the monthly mortgage payment. Assembling the hefty downpayment required for even a moderately priced home keeps them out of the homebuying market.

The First Time Homebuyers' Act of 1989, which I introduce today, is designed to give a hand to those saving toward the purchase of a first home. Specifically, it allows withdrawal of funds from an IRA—$5,000 per individual; $10,000 per couple—without initial tax penalty if those funds are applied toward the downpayment of a moderately priced first home.

First-time homebuyers need a hand. The Federal Government, however, simply cannot afford a handout. No housing legislation will become law in the 101st Congress if it results in substantial revenue loss to the Treasury—nor should it. Accordingly, the First Time Homebuyers' Act of 1989 includes a tax recapture mechanism triggered by the purchase of a second home. By requiring repayment of the tax subsidy—typically upon purchase of another home several years after the purchase of the first home—this legislation is designed to help put people into their first homes without draining the Treasury.

Legislation of this type was recommended in the March 1988 Report of the National Housing Task Force. That panel made some very cogent observations about the inability of first-time homeowners to use IRA's to make an investment in their home. The panel's report, "A Decent Place to Live," said:

The law permits a broad range of investment vehicles for IRA's—but not one's own home. This is neither sensible nor fair. To most Americans, a house is their most significant, costly and valuable investment. If a family can invest its IRA in gold or soybean futures, why not in its home?"

The report, which will be discussed widely this year as Congress lays the groundwork for a housing policy of the 1990's, asks a good question. Why should not Americans be allowed to use IRA's to invest in their own homes? In my view, such investment is far more socially productive than using an IRA to speculate on the soybean market.

The National Housing Task Force report also makes an important observation on the revenue aspects of IRA downpayment legislation. The report points out:

While certain families might be encouraged by this program to establish IRA's for the purpose of buying a home, this authority should not cause significant loss of revenues to the Federal Government. It would not change the amount of money that may be deposited in benefit plans, nor the income limits or other conditions on tax-deferred deposits—limitations that have reduced the cost of new IRA's. Normal IRA taxation rules would apply to amounts withdrawn prematurely and to amounts received that are not reinvested in a home. Because taxes are already deferred on the appreciation of a home, there would be no incentive to invest IRA funds beyond the minimum level needed to qualify for a home; above that amount, the buyer would, in effect, be losing the benefit of tax-deferred appreciation and earnings that would otherwise be realized in a retirement account. Thus, overall revenue loss to the Federal Government might indeed be less than if buyers had separate tax-deferred investments in their homes and their retirement accounts.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support for this legislation. At this point, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a section-by-section description of the First Time Homebuyers' Act of 1989.

THE COAL PIPELINE ACT OF 1989

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Coal Pipeline Act of 1989 which will allow the construction of interstate coal pipelines. Such pipelines will carry pulverized coal mixed with water or other liquids to a powerplant. This bill would allow interstate coal pipelines, which have obtained State authority for water use and are determined to be in the national interest, to exercise the Federal right of eminent domain.

The Coal Pipeline Act will offer shippers an alternative, less expensive means of transportation thus enhancing competitiveness of American coal. The Coal Pipeline Act will lower rates for consumers and reduce reliance on foreign fuel and the Coal Pipeline Act will provide jobs in the construction, manufacturing, and operation of the pipelines. Without Federal eminent domain authority coal pipelines will not be built. Eminent domain has historically been available to other interstate energy and transportation systems—including railroads—and I believe that it is necessary and appropriate to extend such authority to coal pipelines.

The Federal right of eminent domain is necessary because over the years the railroads have blocked the construction of coal pipelines by forcing the costly litigation of easements over railroad rights-of-way. In August 1984 the railroads successfully blocked the Energy Transportation System, Inc. [ETSI] pipeline project by forcing court determination of 67 separate rights-of-way over a 6-year period. ETSI invested more than $130 million and spent more than 10 years trying to obtain the necessary rights-of-way. ETSI prevailed on the merits each time but was forced to abandon the project because of the expense and delays caused by litigation. I think such actions are unconscionable.

Coal pipelines would mean cheaper and more competitive American coal in the United States and in the world marketplace. Without coal pipelines railroads can charge unreasonably high rates, increasing the delivered price of coal. Currently the railroads have no competition in the transport of coal and since deregulation can charge unreasonably high rates. The Coal Pipeline Act would enable pipelines, that conform to State water law, meet the environmental criteria and are in the national interest to gain the rights-of-way necessary for construction. The bill would only allow construction of coal pipelines that first obtain water rights under appropriate State law and that the Secretary of the Interior determines to be in the national interest.

Mr. Speaker, the Coal Pipeline Act of 1989 will save taxpayers millions of dollars. This legislation has the potential of creating over 300,000 new jobs in construction, manufacturing, and service-related industries, and will enable the steel industry to compete for the production of the millions of tons of steel pipe necessary to build coal pipelines in the United States. Most importantly the Coal Pipeline Act of 1989 will enable the free market to operate, increasing the competitiveness of the American coal in the United States and world marketplace. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

CLEAN AIR ACT AMENDMENTS OF THE 101ST CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to address the problem of toxic chemicals in the air. I view this bill as a first step toward enactment in this Congress of a comprehensive clean air bill that is fair, reasonable, and effective without encumbering economic expansion in this Nation or hindering competition for our industrial and commercial sectors.

The bill is identical, with one minor technical exception, to the air toxics bill (H.R. 5556) that I introduced late in the 100th Congress by request. That bill was drafted by the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] and provided to me as a courtesy. While it did not have any official administration status, it was a helpful and good effort and most importantly, a recognition by the EPA that a legislative "fix" for section 112 of the Clean Air Act is needed. I have urged a "legislative fix" for several years.

I have not used the words "by request" this time because I do not think it is necessary. The questions and concerns I raised when I introduced H.R. 5556 remain valid today. They include a concern about the long list of substances, the idea of such a list, the priorities, the deadlines, and the extent of controls. There has not been enough time, particularly with the holidays, to receive and consider responses to these concerns and questions or to hear other comments and to make any changes to meet my concerns. However, no one should delay greatly because, as you know Mr. Speaker, I am considering introduction of a more comprehensive bill that surely will include toxics as one of the important parts.

It is also important to point out that Congress has not amended the Clean Air Act since 1977. During that time, the law—which is permanent and does not need reauthorization—has been very effective in improving our Nation's air quality. Since then, there also have been a number of proposals in several Congresses to amend the law in the House. Most centered around the acid rain issue which has been quite controversial.

During the 100th Congress, the debate shifted. The 1987 deadline for ozone and carbon monoxide nonattainment areas expired and legislative proposals to expand the law greatly in regard to those areas were introduced for the first time in the House, along with differing acid rain proposals. Until H.R. 5556, the issue of toxics was not before us despite its clear importance. Late last year, EPA pointed out that changes in the law were also needed to deal with the new PM-10—fine particulate—standard. In short, the scope of the Clean Air Act agenda never fully crystallized in the House during the 100th Congress.

I think we are better informed today and have an opportunity to carefully and deliberately fashion a proper legislative package. That is my objective which I know you share Mr. Speaker. I want to work with you in achieving it before the end of the 101st Congress. I know that many of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle on the Energy and Commerce Committee also share that goal. I look forward to working closely with them, the new administration, industry, labor, the cities, and others to develop a comprehensive bill.

CALENDAR OF EVENTS FOR COMMEMORATION OF THE BICENTENNIAL OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, with the convening of the 101st Congress we begin the commemoration of the bicentennial of the House of Representatives which, on March 4, 1989, will complete 200 years of service to the Nation under the U.S. Constitution. It will also mark the beginning of our third century. So, we will be looking back into history for lessons and inspiration as we help prepare for the future and the 21st century. As the jurist Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., said, "When I want to understand what is happening today or try to decide what will happen tomorrow, I look back." Our Founding Fathers knew well the power of history and used its lessons well when they drafted the Constitution. It was up to the Congress to fulfill the work of the Founders by turning that great document into a working government.

The Commission on the Bicentenary of the House of Representatives has been given the pleasant assignment of planning the celebration of our 200th anniversary with appropriate exhibits, publications, conferences, and ceremonies. The Office for the Bicentennial of the House has prepared a year-long program in cooperation with the Senate Bicentennial Commission, the Library of Congress, the Smithsonian Institution, the National Archives, the Department of the Army, and others who have lent their efforts to the congressional bicentennial.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert into the RECORD the Calendar of Bicentennial Events for 1989. I urge all my colleagues to join in this celebration of 200 years of representative government in the United States.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOAGLAND] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOAGLAND. Mr. Speaker, if I had been present, I would have voted "yes" on ordering the previous question on House Resolution 5, adopting the rules of the House. The bell system had not been connected in my office. I was not informed of the vote.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. HERGER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, earlier today on rollcall vote No. 4, House Resolution 5, a motion to commit with instructions, I inadvertently voted "nay." My intention was to vote "yea," and I regret that time expired on the vote before I discovered the error.

I trust this explanation of my position on a procedural vote will clear up any possible confusion.

CENTRAL AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I went through a great deal of thought in the past several weeks as to what I was going to offer as my maiden speech in this historic 101st Congress.

Today, we begin the third century of the U.S. Congress. This Congress will lead us into the last decade, not only of this century but of this millennium, and there are a wide range of issues which I had wanted to discuss.

Mr. Speaker, of course, as a member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, we are dealing with one of the most critical problems—the savings and loan crisis. We, of course, have the budget deficit which is an overwhelming one, and then we look at the problem that expanded within the past 2 weeks, that of international terrorism and the horrible plight of those who were on the Pan American Flight 103. I had actually decided that I was going to talk specifically about an area where I have had the privilege to work and focus a great deal of attention in the past several years, and that is the plight of the people of Afghanistan. Since December 27, 1979, they have been suffering from genocide at the hands of the Soviets, and that continues today even though we are attempting to bring about a total withdrawal of Soviet troops in Afghanistan.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to talk about those, as I have made a decision to do a couple of things, and it stems in part from the spectacular opening speech which the Speaker provided us today in his acceptance of the Speakership, and that specifically, Mr. Speaker, is the situation as it exists in Central America.

Mr. Speaker, between Christmas and New Year's, I had an opportunity to spend the week in Central America. We were in Honduras, El Salvador, and Costa Rica. I am not going to stand here and encourage Contra aid, which certainly will be an issue which we will face, I hope, at some time. I am not going to lay down that challenge today.

Mr. Speaker, I am one who has supported the negotiating process in the past. I supported the Contadora process. In August 1987, I enthusiastically supported the Reagan-Wright peace plan. I supported the Esquipulas 2 plan which was signed August 7, 1987, and I supported the Sapoa agreements even though I knew as President Reagan has said over and over again, "name one totalitarian Communist regime which has ever negotiated itself out of existence, and you cannot do it." But I have still wanted to hold out that little tiny bit of hope, Mr. Speaker, that as we have tried the diplomatic route over and over again, that we would in fact be successful. Tragically, as the repression continues, it is no secret that we have seen the failure of all of those plans in Central America.

I will tell the Speaker, having spent the last week in Central America, I am very concerned, and I know the Speaker is, too. The Speaker demonstrated that in his opening speech here to us today. He talked about the fact that we desperately want a bipartisan foreign policy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind our guests in the Chamber that they are our guests. We appreciate their presence here, but under the rules of the House, signs of approval or disapproval of what takes place on the floor are not allowed, but we do welcome them here.

The gentleman may continue.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I know the wonderful people from the State of Delaware do certainly, many of them, support exactly what I am talking about, but I have a sneaking suspicion that the boisterous sign of approval from the gallery had nothing to do with anything that I was saying.

Mr. Speaker, nevertheless, I want to talk about the Speaker's speech which was delivered earlier this afternoon and the call for a bipartisan foreign policy which was a very good and strong one.

Mr. Speaker, in fact, if we look at the foreign policy which this administration has propounded over the past several years, it does, in fact, have bipartisan support. I talked about the situation in Afghanistan. There was virtual unanimity of thought amongst the Democratic and Republican Members of both the House and the Senate in support of the Mujahidin who have been struggling for freedom, and also if we look at other parts of the world, the Mideast, if we look at Western Europe, many of us called for an increase in participation of our allies, specifically West Germany and Japan, in support of their defenses.

Both sides of the aisle joined in that call quite often.

There has been some disagreement in the southern tip of Africa, but nowhere, Mr. Speaker have we had a greater struggle in trying to bring about a bipartisan foreign policy than we have in our own backyard in Central America. I want to provide the 101st Congress with a challenge.

You said, Mr. Speaker, that democracy is on the move. We are all very proud of the fact that over this past decade we have seen for the first time in years free and fair elections held in Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador, Brazil, Argentina, Bolivia, Uruguay. We have seen in Granada free and fair elections held. Of course also in the Philippines, South Korea, Pakistan, Chile. We know, in fact, that with many of these fledgling democracies democracy is, nevertheless, on the move. I would argue, Mr. Speaker, from having spent last week in Central America, that democracy is on the move even further in Central America.

I said I was not going to stand here and call out for aid to the Democratic Resistance, even though I do believe that it is a necessity. What I am here to do in this maiden speech in this 101st Congress, Mr. Speaker, is laying out a challenge for us in the Congress. That challenge is another diplomatic one.

We have seen over the past several years a tremendous improvement in relations with the Soviet Union. It is no secret that having signed that historic Intermediate Nuclear Force agreement that we have made strides. I do not believe everything is perfect. I do not think anyone believes everything is perfect now, but we have made significant strides. But again, we have seen a destabilization which continues to take place, unfortunately, in Central America. In fact last June when President Reagan went to Moscow General Secretary Gorbachev refused to discuss Central America.

I talked about the bipartisan support which has existed throughout the world, Mr. Speaker. Last week, while in those Central American countries which I visited, time and time again business people, campesinos, military leaders, and political leaders asked me this question over and over again: Why is it that you have bipartisan consensus supporting the Democratic Resistance, the Freedom Fighters, the Mujahidin in Afghanistan, and yet we have an identical cause here, a cause which is identical to that which the people of Afghanistan are fighting, and we are geographically closer to you, and yet you cannot get a bipartisan consensus? Mr. Speaker, I hope that our bipartisan consensus, which frankly has existed over the past several months because we on both sides of the aisle have, not necessarily out of choice, in every instance supported in negotiating process. But I have to ask this question, Mr. Speaker: If the Sandinistas truly are a nationalistic revolution which they claim from July 1979 back when they promised those four basic things to the Organization of American States; free and fair elections, an end to human rights violations, a nonaligned foreign policy, and political pluralism, why, Mr. Speaker, if they truly are a nationalistic revolution are they still receiving $1 billion a year in military and economic aid from the Soviet Union?

I believe that is the challenge we face. We must encourage the Soviet Union, if they truly are interested in perestroika and glasnost, to extricate themselves from this part of the world.

Let me throw this out, Mr. Speaker: what is the strategic significance of Central America to the Soviets? Is there any great economic opportunity which the Soviets could seek in Central America? Absolutely not. There is no significant economic gain to be accrued to the Soviets. The only reason, the only reason that the Isthmus of Central America has a strategic significance now to us is the fact that there is the Soviet presence.

We have the socialist Nicaragua threat which is close to the Panama Canal and that's an issue which has yet to be resolved. We hear reports that the Soviets may be reducing their assistance to both Cuba and to Nicaragua.

One of the main reasons is, and it has been no secret, we have seen for the past 2 to 3 years a lack of accounting of the expenditure of those Soviet dollars in Nicaragua as they have headed into Nicaragua, specifically over the issue of oil. Even though we hear the reports, military and economic aid from the Soviets continues to flow to Nicaragua.

We know though that Fidel Castro, who 12 years ago was one of Daniel Ortega's chief supporters, is meeting today, this very day in Havana with Ortega as Castro celebrates the 30th anniversary of his Communist rule. We know that the backing which the Cubans have provided to that operation of Daniel Ortega's is going to continue as Ortega is Castro's protege.

What we must do, Mr. Speaker, is encourage the Soviets to extricate themselves from Central America. Why are the Soviets supporting the worst, most difficult military dictator in this hemisphere? Why is it that Nicaragua must have the largest armed force in the region? Why must it have block committees? Why not freedom of assembly, freedom of the press, freedom of religion, those things that were promised to the Organization of American States, those things that were promised in the Esquipulas II agreement a year and a half ago?

The Soviets say that they want normal relations in this part of the world. They should prove it, Mr. Speaker, by getting out now.

What is it that the United States of America wants? We want only that these countries in Central America have the opportunity to continue to evolve as part of Western civilization. Western civilization, of course, comes in a great variety of forms, Mr. Speaker. That is the virtue of freedom. It allows, indeed it demands diversity. We do not seek to impose our will on Central America, only that they be allowed to express their own will, free from the arbitrary use of violence.

The Central Americans I found from spending the week down there do not want us out of Central America, Mr. Speaker. They want the Soviets out of Central America. From us they want support, understanding, empathy, and a consistent policy which is supported by both Democrats and Republicans.

Many Central Americans do not support the Contras not because the Contras, cannot do the job, but because they cannot do the job without consistent United States support, and by themselves they cannot do the job if the Sandinistas can count on unlimited Soviet, Cuban support. The Central Americans believe that if the Soviet support is withdrawn, the Sandinistas cease to be a threat.

The Contras are predominantly peasants, campesinos, who just want to return home and farm without interference, without collectivization, and without being drafted. And I have to say, Mr. Speaker, what I witnessed down there was incredible, young 15-, 16-, 17-year-old boys who told us of how their friends were being corralled and literally kidnaped and taken to join the Sandinista army. They talked about how young 10-, 11-, and 12-year-olds are used by the Sandinistas in Nicaragua and the FMLN, the Communist guerrillas in El Salvador, to crawl on their hands and knees to detect land mines. Then I asked a young person who was at a camp right on the border in southern Honduras if the Democratic Resistance did anything like that, and he said no, not at all.

I have a Contra training manual which is sitting in my office, Mr. Speaker, and probably I will have the opportunity to bring it down later, which talks about the necessity for insuring human rights.

So those on the other side of the aisle who continually talk about human rights violations being perpetrated by the Contras, are, in fact, wrong. If the Soviets withdraw, the United States of America can relax. If the Sandinistas stop forced recruitment into their giant military, and if they allow the campesinos to work their own land and sell their own crops, the Contras will cease being a threat to them.

Well, I will tell you that the fact that the people of Nicaragua cannot work their own land and run their own crops is really what it is that is keeping them strong and together.

I asked individuals time and time again "Why is it that you are here working as a Contra freedom fighter?" They said, "It is simply because Sandinista Soldiers came and took our lands and corralled up so many of our friends."

Mr. Speaker, these demands for a pluralistic society are very reasonable demands, easily verified, that can in fact begin immediately. After all, they were promised in 1979 and in the many agreements which the Sandinistas continue to violate. A prolonged period of diplomacy is not necessary but I am told that within the next couple of days we are going to see a new diplomatic initiative emanating from the Democratic Resistance. And, Mr. Speaker, once again, even though I have my doubts about a totalitarian Communist regime negotiating itself out of existence, I will support this next peace plan.

If, Mr. Speaker, fanatical minorities throughout Central America believe they can count on unlimited, unending Soviet/Cuban support they will endure and they will wear us down. In fact, they may have already done it. If we refuse to know the enemy, let us at least know ourselves, Mr. Speaker. We will tire, and the human tragedy that is already unfolding will come crashing into our consciousness only when the cost of reversing it will have become astronomical.

Mr. Speaker, on several occasions I have pointed to the fact, which was reaffirmed on this trip last week, that the four democratically elected presidents in Central America, Cerezo of Guatemala, Azcona of Honduras, Durate of El Salvador and Arias of Costa Rica do not in fact share the exact same goal which we do. You would think that they do, but they do not.

A number of political and military leaders in those countries asked us to send in U.S. military forces. That is what they want.

What we want to do, Mr. Speaker, is to insure we never have to send a single U.S. combat troop to Central America.

If we are to have the time our system needs to deal with this troubled part of the world, then the Soviets must go and that is the gauntlet which I lay down for the 101st Congress.

Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of bipartisanship in foreign policy which you eloquently discussed today let's insist that the Soviets extricate themselves from Central America and do it now.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A TRIBUTE TO SIX KANSAS CITY FIREFIGHTERS

HON. ALAN WHEAT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, today we return to Capitol Hill to convene the 101st Congress of the United States. But before we proceed to the business of the day, I would like to take a moment to pay tribute to six Kansas City firefighters who tragically lost their lives just as the holiday season began.

On Tuesday, November 29, 1988, two devastating chemical explosions took the lives of the six firefighters and left families, friends, and firefighters across the Nation in grief. It was the worst firefighting disaster in the city's history. The entire city mourned the loss of six of its finest men.

It was a loss that was deeply felt by the community, and the tremendous outpouring of sympathy and support from my constituents was commensurate with that pain. Sometimes, in our day to day existence, we tend to overlook the life-threatening danger that hovers above those to whom we entrust the public safety. A tragedy such as this one is a stark and painful reminder of the ever-present threat to which these men and their firefighting brothers expose themselves so that others may live in safety.

Who were these courageous men? Capt. Gerald C. Halloran, Capt. James H. Kilventon, and firefighters Michael R. Oldham, Thomas M. Fry, Robert D. McKarnin, and Luther E. Hurd. They were ordinary people with extraordinary character, men with families, good friends, and much to look forward to.

CAPT. GERALD C. HALLORAN

The senior captain of the fire department, he was a banjo player with a proud Irish heritage. A member of the Knights of Columbus, the John F. Kennedy Council, and the Ancient Order of Hibernians, he was a lover of history, travel, cabinetry, and horse racing. Above all, he considered himself a public servant. He had three children and six grandchildren. He was 57 years old. He gave his life in service to his community.

CAPT. JAMES H. KILVENTON

Firefighting was always James Kilventon's first priority. He also found other ways to enjoy time with his family and friends. He was a great cook, and every firefighter who ever tasted his chili testifies to it. He loved fishing and hunting. He was especially proud of his Irish heritage and was a member of the Knights of Columbus. An ex-Navy man, he was one who was always doing for others. He had been at the fire station 7 years, and he had a daughter and a son. He was 54 years old. He gave his life in service to his community.

MICHAEL R. OLDHAM

A kind and dedicated firefighter and family man. He had recently moved into a new house with his wife and two children. He was a quiet man who enjoyed horticulture, and his home reflected his love of plants and trees. He was a reflective man who enjoyed cooking, fishing, and playing with his children. He was 32 years old. He gave his life in service to his community.

THOMAS M. FRY

He started with the department in 1973 and was the proud father of a 6-year old girl. He loved hunting, waterskiing, and time spent with friends. Firefighting gave him the opportunity to do what he most enjoyed—helping other people. He took up skydiving at one time and he loved off-the-road vehicles. He spent time in Germany in the service and then became a firefighter. He was 41 years old. He gave his life in service to his community.

ROBERT D. MCKARNIN

A veteran of the force who started in 1968, he had two children. He was an outstanding high school athlete, an accomplished woodworker, and a man who realized his dream to become a fireman. He loved fishing and boating and fixing things for other people. He was a handyman, especially with cars. He was a member of the first graduating class of Reytown South High School in Kansas City, and he designed the class ring. He was 42 years old. He gave his life in service to his community.

LUTHER E. HURD

The father of three children and an 11 year veteran firefighter. He was a star high school football player who forsook his athletic aspirations to take care of his ailing mother. He relished time with his wife and children, and he relished firefighting. For several years, he had taught Red Cross cardiopulmonary resuscitation classes, and he served on the fire department's honor guard representing the department at parades and other official events. He was 31 years old. He gave his life in service to his community.

These six men will not be forgotten.

We must rededicate ourselves to recognizing the extreme dangers posed by the transportation and storage of hazardous materials. We must take whatever steps are necessary a minimize the threats these materials present to firefighters and other citizens. And we must provide the necessary support to our Nation's fire and emergency response units to enable them to perform their jobs effectively without needlessly jeopardizing their lives.

Mr. Speaker, these men are gone, but they did not die in vain. We will learn painful lessons from their deaths, and those lessons will save the lives of others in the future.

As firefighters, they gave the supreme sacrifice of their noble profession. For this, each of these men would be proud. Indeed, our entire city is proud.

We salute their courage, and we will miss them.

BETHLEHEM CATHOLIC HIGH SCHOOL WINS FIRST PENNSYLVANIA CLASS 2A FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, December 10, the Golden Hawks of Bethlehem Catholic High School [Becahi] defeated the Wilmington Greyhounds 26 to 11 in Altoona to capture the first ever PIAA Class AA football championship. Winning a State championship is a great moment in the career of any coach or player and as the U.S. Representative for these individuals, it is indeed a pleasure to point with pride to their outstanding record and to include my remarks in the RECORD.

But we must also take this opportunity to congratulate the State of Pennsylvania which had never crowned State football champions until this year—accomplishing this in four categories in 1988 with nearly 1,000 football-playing-schools competing. Furthermore, in many States, parochial schools do not participate in State-sponsored athletic playoffs.

Mr. Speaker, congratulations are in order not for Becahi principal, Dick Culver, for his coordination efforts, but also for coach Bob Stem. Coach Stem has a 56–14–1 record at Becahi (112–44–5 overall) and was chosen as Pennsylvania's Small School Coach of the Year by the Associated Press for an undefeated season. The record is even more impressive when one considers that Becahi is the smallest school, and the lone class AA school in the competitive East Penn Conference. Moreover the Golden Hawks played all but one of their games against class AAAA (the largest) schools.

Mr. Speaker, the determination of the Becahi team overcame the lack of size and quantity of its football resources. The spirit generated by the parents, alumni, and friends helped "carry the ball" in pursuit of their common goal. I hope we can generate this same spirit in the 101st Congress.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I include editorials from the Bethlehem Globe Times and the Allentown Morning Call paying tribute to the Golden Hawks.

[From the Allentown (PA) Morning Call, Dec. 12, 1988]

HOORAY, HAWKS! A "TEAM" WIN

"Realistically we did not have the greatest bunch of athletes or the most physical guys, but we were successful because we were a team."—Bob Stem Jr., senior captain, Bethlehem Catholic football team.

And what a team! How about those Golden Hawks? They did themselves, their families, their school and the entire Lehigh Valley proud by nailing down Bethlehem Catholic's first Class 2A State Championship last Saurday. The whoopin' and hollerin' is still going on in Bethlehem. Let it. This bunch of tough-minded, hard-working young men and their coaches earned every whoop and every holler.

In posting a flawless 14-0 record this year, the Golden Hawks demonstrated balance, skill and determination. One of the team's senior captains, young Mr. Stem was right when he described his teammates as not the biggest, not the most physical. But they had the biggest hearts. That's what counts at the end . . . that and motivation. And the motivation came in heaping doses.

In whipping Lawrence County's Wilmington High as convincingly as they did—under brutally cold conditions—the Golden Hawks showed they are truly "a team." The individual efforts seemed to go into a collective fund and at the end of that exciting game, a victory was withdrawn.

"This has to be my proudest moment of my coaching career," declared a triumphant head coach Bob Stem after his Hawks watched the clock tick down on Saturday's final score of 26-11. His pride is shared by everyone in the Lehigh Valley who appreciates good sport, and the spectacle of young athletes doing their best . . . as a team.

[From the Bethlehem (PA) Globe-Times, Dec. 12, 1988]

BETHLEHEM CATHOLIC 11 LIVES A GRIDIRON DREAM

"Dreams can come true and they have for Bethlehem Catholic."

The words were those of Mayor Ken Smith on a frosty Sunday of celebration, but the felling is shared by all in the Bethlehem area.

Bethlehem Catholic, the small school with the big-time football program, has won the PIAA Class AA football championship. And the Golden Hawks did it in typical fashion, combining a balanced offense with a hard-nosed defense that put a far greater chill into the Wilmington High School team than even could the 15-degree temperature in Altoona.

Becahi won the state title with determination, skill and good coaching. This was old-fashioned high school football—seven players going both ways, bone-crushing hits and heroics when heroics were necessary.

And when it comes time to list the heroes—young men by the names of Mattes, Stem, Iasiello, Marsh, Spagnola, Brady and Carpenter—the legend will already be firmly intact.

This little school, which emerged unbeaten from the tough East Penn Conference, had dared to dream. And that dream was realized on a wind-swept field in western Pennsylvania.

But this was not just a victory of players and coaches. It is a victory of a school that has often looked defeat in the face and refused to wince.

It is no surprise this fall that the Golden Hawk volleyball team went to the state semifinals and the Becahi soccer team qualified for the PIAA tournament.

These kids work hard and won't accept less than success.

There is really no reason that the EPC's smallest school should dominate so in football. But it's something that goes beyond numbers and beyond dreams.

It's a drive instilled by a fine coaching staff, led by Bob Stem.

While this state title may surprise some unfamiliar with Stem-led football teams, the only real shame we can see is that the Golden Hawks were limited to the Class AA arena. One can only wonder what this little team—which fares so well in the trenches with the biggest and best from other areas of the state.

That can be left to late-night arguments of what might have been.

What is fact is that in 1988, the Bethlehem Catholic High School football team is the undefeated state champion in its class.

And we, along with this city's residents, are mighty proud of the great honor the Golden Hawks have brought upon themselves and to our community.

THE CLEAN AIR ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1989

HON. AL SWIFT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, on behalf of myself and eight other members of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, a bill to amend the Clean Air Act. This bill is identical to the one which the nine of us introduced 3 months ago, as the 100th Congress was drawing to a close.

At the time we introduced this bill in the last Congress, I pointed to the intransigence of many on both sides—industry and environmentalists—as having doomed our efforts, and those of others, to pass comprehensive clean air legislation. I was not alone in my criticism of those who, in the end, successfully sought to kill a clean air compromise.

Today, I hope, is a day for renewed possibilities. It is the beginning of a new year and a new Congress. We all have the benefit of reflection over last year's progress and last year's failures.

For nearly a decade, there have only been two sides to the clean air debate. One side has maintained that clean air legislation is too expensive, that it would cripple industry, and that it simply is not worth the cost. The other side has argued that improved air quality is too important a goal to allow economic factors to be considered. Ironically, both sides in this debate have implicitly accepted the same premise: that good clean air policy and good economic policy are incompatible.

I reject that premise. I believe that it is possible to have both clean air and a strong economy. I believe that it is possible to improve air quality in a cost-effective fashion. I believe that the American people want and deserve comprehensive clean air legislation that doesn't result in sacrificed jobs or communities. And I believe that it is Congress' responsibility to pass such legislation.

To those who are concerned with clean air legislation, whether they represent industry or environmentalists or anyone else, I extend an invitation to work with us to develop such legislation. I am anxious to work with any and all who are committed to the development of such legislation.

No doubt there will be some on both sides who will choose to continue to carry on the old debate of clean air versus economic growth. To them I say that there is now a third side to this debate. No longer will Congress be limited to choosing between clean air or jobs, clean air or growth, clean air or competitiveness. As the 101st Congress considers clean air legislation, we now have the ability to choose both clean air and jobs, clean air and growth, clean air and competitiveness.

As the third side to the clean air debate unfolds, I am confident that the American people and the Congress will embrace it with enthusiasm. With that spirit of optimism, therefore, I urge all of my colleagues to join with those of us who are introducing this bill. Let this be the Congress that passes the kind of clean air legislation that the American people want and deserve.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION REQUIRING HOSPITALS TO BE QUALIFIED MEDICAID PROVIDERS

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, earlier today, I introduced legislation, along with Congressman PETE STARK, the chairman of the Health Subcommittee, to address what we believe is becoming a serious problem with hospitals in this country which refuse to acknowledge their responsibility to those individuals who do not have adequate access to health care.

I am referring to hospitals which refuse to accept Medicaid patients or hospitals which refuse to accept patients who do not have health insurance. Simply put, Mr. Speaker, the primary role of a hospital is to care for sick people. But when access to care is denied because a patient is incapable of paying for services, especially by a hospital which receives enormously generous benefits from the taxpayers of this country, it's time for Congress to step in.

A study reported in the Milbank Quarterly showed that 15 percent of for-profit hospitals surveyed discouraged admission of Medicaid patients, 5 percent of private nonprofit hospitals discouraged admission, and 3 percent of public hospitals discouraged admission. Even worse are the statistics for hospitals which discourage admission of uninsured patients: 43 percent of for-profit hospitals, 20 percent of private nonprofit hospitals, and 14 percent of public hospitals. In addition, many hospitals do not have Medicaid provider agreements.

The Health Care Providers Responsibility Act, which we introduce today, has two main provisions, but its overriding purpose is to provide that when a hospital or skilled nursing facility, or other health care facility, receives proceeds from a tax-exempt bond, or when a health care facility is a qualified Medicare provider, the health care facility is required to accept Medicaid patients. Although I think this bill should go further—and will continue to pursue attempts to make it go further—I am introducing this bill today to send a message that hospitals have a responsibility to their community when they receive benefits from the taxpayers of this country.

I want to reiterate this point. When I introduced this legislation last year, and again today, it only provides that a hospital must have a Medicaid provider agreement. It says nothing about care for patients without health insurance and says nothing on its face about patient dumping. I plan to use the next several months—before the reconciliation process begins in the Committee on Ways and Means—to address these major problems, and deal with them as an amendment to this legislation.

A more detailed explanation of the legislation follows:

AMENDMENTS TO TAX-EXEMPT BOND RULES

PRESENT LAW

Condition of bond exemption

Interest on obligations of State and local governments is exempt from Federal income tax under authority of section 103 of the Internal Revenue Code. In the case of a private activity bond (i.e., a bond where proceeds are used to finance private activities), interest on the bond is taxable unless a specific Code provision operates to exclude the interest from taxation.

One such exception is provided for "qualified 501(c)(3) bonds" (Code sec. 145). A bond is a qualified 501(c)(3) bond generally if the proceeds of the issue are used by an organization exempt from tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code or by a governmental unit. Other requirements are also imposed on general obligation bonds (see, for example, code sections 147 and 149).

Application of unrelated business income tax

Under present law, if there is a change in the use of facilities financed in whole or in part with proceeds from a tax-exempt private activity bond, several adverse consequences result. In the case of qualified 501(c)(3) bonds, a change in use can result in the 501(c)(3) entity becoming subject to the unrelated business income tax.

Code section 150(b)(3) subjects these entities to the unrelated business income tax if facilities owned by these entitled, financed with proceeds of tax-exempt bonds, are used in a trade or business by a non-exempt person. In addition, no deduction for interest in financing provided by tax-exempt bonds is allowed for entities which become subject to the unrelated business income tax under this section.

EXPLANATION OF PROVISION

Condition of bond exemption

Under the bill, interest on an inpatient health care facility bond would not be exempt from tax unless, at the time the bond was issued, the facility receiving proceeds from the bond was a qualified Medicaid provider is the State in which the facility was located. An "inpatient health care facility bond" is a private activity bond, any proceeds of which are used by or on behalf of an inpatient health care facility. The term inpatient health care facility includes, but is not limited to, hospitals, skilled nursing facilities, and intermediate care facilities. The bill is also intended to cover such services as those commonly provided in hospital emergency rooms.

It is anticipated that the Secretary will monitor the activities of hospitals which have provider agreements and receive proceeds from inpatient health care facility bonds closely. For example, if a hospital had a provider agreement, but discouraged admission of Medicaid patients, or attempted to discharge those patients before they were well, the Secretary would be expected to notify these hospitals that such actions were inappropriate as a condition of receiving the benefits of tax-exempt financing. Such actions by hospitals might well subject the hospitals to loss of a provider agreement under many State Medicaid laws, thus subjecting the hospitals to the unrelated business income tax (as discussed below).

Unrelated business income tax provisions

Under the bill, interest on a general obligation bond would not lose its exemption from Federal income tax retroactively if proceeds from that issue were used to provide an inpatient health care facility which violated the Medicaid standards discussed above. This is because, in the case of a general obligation bond, it is possible that only a fraction of the proceeds would be lent to an inpatient health care facility within the meaning of the bill. A decision was made that it was inappropriate to taint the entire bond issue if only a small fraction of the proceeds were made available to an offending facility, or if it were impossible to trace the proceeds to such a facility.

Nonetheless, inpatient health care facilities which receive proceeds from a general obligation bond are still required to be Medicaid providers. Similar to the rules governing facilities financed under 501(c)(3) bonds which are used by a person other than a 501(c)(3) orgaization or governmental unit, the bill subjects the facility to the unrelated business income tax. Thus, if financing from a general obligation bond were provided to any inpatient health care facility from a bond which purported to be a tax-exempt bond at the time of its issue, and the facility did not meet the requirement specified above relating to being a Medicaid provider, then the owner of the facility would be subject to the unrelated business income tax imposed by Code section 511. The unrelated business income tax would be imposed in any year in which the facility failed the test relating to Medicaid.

The provisions relating to the unrelated business income tax would also apply to an inpatient health care facility which received financing from a inpatient health care facility bond and which violated the Medicaid standard. Thus, interest on bonds would not lose income tax exemption, but the offending facility would become subject to the unrelated business income tax sanction for the taxable year (or years) in which the facility did not have a provider agreement under the State's Medicaid program. Furthermore, any deduction for interest on bond financing which would arise as a result of the facility becoming liable for the unrelated business income tax would be disallowed.

EFFECTIVE DATE

The provision would be effective for bonds issued after December 31, 1989. No inference is intended that this effective date could not be moved forward to an earlier point in time if, upon action on this legislation by the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee were to determine that the December 31 effective date would cause a rush to market.

AMENDMENTS TO MEDICARE PROGRAM

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, the Medicare reimburses most acute-care hospitals on the basis of a prospective payment system. Reimbursement for care is determined prospectively, and hospitals will generally receive a fixed amount for the care of a Medicare patient. Certain costs are excluded from the prospective payment system, however.

In the case of the costs of direct or indirect medical education, for example, the reimbursement for care of a Medicare patient is adjusted by a direct or indirect medical education factor if the hospital incurs such costs. In addition, the costs of hospital capital are generally passed directly through to a hospital (subject to a 15% reduction in fiscal year 1989). Present law does not require hospitals or skilled nursing facilities to be Medicaid providers as a condition of participation in the Medicare program.

EXPLANATION OF PROVISION

Under the bill, a hospital or skilled nursing facility not having a qualified Medicaid provider agreement in the State in which the facility was located would not receive payments under Part B of the Medicare program, nor adjustments for direct and indirect medical education costs, nor capital-related payments.

EFFECTIVE DATE

The provision would be effective for hospital cost reporting periods beginning on or after September 15, 1989.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET REFORM ACT OF 1989

HON. ANDY IRELAND

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Congressional Budget Reform Act of 1989, legislation which is intended to institutionalize the concept of the legislative-executive budget summit that took place after the stock market crash of 1987. The budget summit was a rather extraordinary achievement, when Congress and the administration formed a consensus on overall budget targets and stuck to them. Unfortunately, this was only made possible by a genuine fear among members of both parties that the economy would collapse under the weight of exploding deficits. This kind of crisis management will not solve the problem of the structural deficit or our long-term debt situation.

Congress attempted budget reform with the 1974 Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act, which was intended to make Congress a more involved participant in the budget process. In doing so, the new act cut out the executive branch, which up to that point had been the dominant player in the field. Today, the annual budget submitted by the President is declared "Dead on Arrival" as soon as it reaches Congress, regardless of who occupies the Oval Office. Meanwhile, Congress goes about feverishly working on a budget outline that the administration cannot endorse. In recent years, the result has been nothing short of total stalemate. At the same time, the budget process is one that consumes an inordinate amount of Congress' time. It has become an unending exercise in which we develop budget guidelines that are, in the end, largely ignored by Congress itself.

My legislation does not require a constitutional amendment, as is the case with the balanced budget and line-item veto proposals.

My bill would amend the 1974 Budget Act to change the system from one based on a concurrent resolution to one based on a joint resolution, which must be approved by both the House and Senate and sent to the President for his signature. In this way, the President becomes an equal player in the budget process. It is the key element that is missing from the process, and the one element which is sorely needed if we are to gain any consensus and deal with the Federal deficit. Forging a consensus with the administration early in the budget cycle would also help avoid confrontation and crisis at the end of each fiscal year.

Late last year, the Gerald R. Ford Foundation announced the publication of a work called Broken Purse Strings, which was coauthored by former Congressional Budget Office Director Rudolph G. Penner. Among the recommendations made by this publication is that there be a joint budget resolution setting out spending and revenue targets that would be subject to a Presidential veto. In addition, my colleagues might recall that the distinguished former Senator from Florida, Lawton Chiles, then chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, originally called for the summit which lead to the agreement on the fiscal year 1989 budget. The success of this crisis-inspired summit proves the value of formalizing this process. And that is exactly what my legislation would do.

I fully understand, Mr. Speaker, that there may be resistance among my colleagues to an idea such as this. However, for the benefit of all of us and for future generations, I think we should give it a fair hearing. We must consider it as one of several vital reforms to be made in the budget process and as one approach to getting a handle on the Federal deficit. At times, it seems the pressure to reduce the deficit is off. Then comes a stock market episode, an edging up of interest rates, a minor oil shock or a fall in the dollar, and we are back to crisis management. We can't go on like this. Reform of the budget process to include the executive branch will not only make all the appropriate Government entities a part of budget development, but will also provide a full range of accountability.

THE JOINT MANUFACTURING OPPORTUNITIES ACT OF 1989

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, today I and several of my colleagues from the Small Business Committee are reintroducing a bill which could give small U.S. manufacturing firms new strength to compete on a global basis.

I am joined in sponsoring this legislation by Mr. LAFALCE, chairman of the Small Business Committee, and Mr. MCDADE, the committee's ranking minority member. My cosponsors include Mr. MAZZOLI, who is a senior member of both the Small Business and the Judiciary Committees, and my fellow Small Business Subcommittee Chairmen, Mr. SKELTON, Mr. ECKART, and Mr. HATCHER.

Mr. Speaker, this bill addresses a very fundamental question facing our Nation: How do we stop the current hemorrhage of U.S. manufacturing jobs?

Since 1981, the United States has suffered a net loss of approximately 700,000 manufacturing jobs. And unless we act to amend underlying problems, analysts expect that over the next couple of years another 100,000 to 150,000 jobs in basic industries will disappear.

This has staggering implications for our national competitiveness. The United States remains a great wellspring of new technology and innovation, but our inventions and ideas too often are being applied in overseas manufacturing plants where operating costs are lower.

The smaller the manufacturer, the more difficult are these problems. To fight off foreign competition in U.S. markets, even the smallest companies must undertake significant investment for plant modernization, worker retraining, and the development of new products and customers.

I believe that through partnerships our small manufacturers can make themselves more competitive, at a lower cost, by spreading investment and risk. One such avenue is the flexible manufacturing network. This European industrial model emphasizing sharing between companies of manufacturing equipment, product development and research, and marketing was investigated by the Subcommittee on Regulation and Business Opportunities, which I chair, in a September 13, 1988, hearing.

Flex networks in Europe have allowed small companies to form consortia to pursue real business opportunities, and have led to an industrial renaissance in some regions. Witnesses representing a number of U.S. industries expressed interest in this kind of informal joint venturing.

But uniformly they also expressed concern that they would be prosecuted under the Clayton Act for antitrust violations, even though the combinations suggested by small-scale, joint manufacturing and market development networks would not necessarily be anticompetitive.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides no one with a safe haven from antitrust enforcement. It does, however, direct the courts to use a rule of reason in determining if a given flexible manufacturing network of firms is anticompetitive, rather than assume that any combination violates the Clayton Act.

The legislation limits entry into such networks. No network combination could absorb more than 20 percent of its relative market. Individual partners in these combinations could not employ more than 500 workers, each.

And there is nothing in this bill that hinders the Government's crucial ability to combat price fixing.

Mr. Speaker, finally, I would like to include in the RECORD a recent editorial from the Oregonian commenting on the issue.

[From the Oregonian, Oct. 28, 1988]

ANTITRUST LAW NEEDS FLEXING

There are two ways to look at bills introduced in the final days of a Congress. There's the cynical view—the proposal is political cover for the fall campaign. Or there's the lofty look—the going-nowhere-now proposal is about legislative tomorrows.

Rep. Ron Wyden's Joint Manufacturing Opportunities Act of 1988 is inescapably the latter. The Portland Democrat has no campaign opposition this fall. Wyden's bill would help clear the way for flexible manufacturing networks in the United States, and the impressive list of co-sponsors on both the House Small Business and Judiciary committees shows that Wyden is clearing the way in the House for his legislation.

The European concept of flexible manufacturing involves small businesses joining together to develop, manufacture and market products while maintaining their individual identities. This pooling lets them afford new technologies, thus better respond to their customers' changing demands.

Patterned after the Export Trading Company Act of 1982 and the National Cooperative Research and Development Act of 1984, Wyden's legislation would modify existing antitrust law to allow small companies in the United States to do the same thing.

Price fixing would remain prohibited. But companies with no more than 500 workers could participate in flexible manufacturing networks so long as the arrangement did not absorb more than 20 percent of the market.

Small-business partnerships would not be deemed automatically anti-competitive. Wyden would have the courts apply a rule of reason, considering all factors in determining antitrust violations.

As Wyden learned in September hearings, there are many ways to encourage flexible manufacturing because there are many barriers to it. Retooling is difficult for a small business strapped for cash. Loans are hard to get because creditors and accountants have yet to adjust to flexible manufacturing's new methods and structures. Government support—financial assistance or advice—is necessarily limited.

Still, Wyden's antitrust approach would be a low-cost means of helping flexible manufacturing along by allowing small businesses to help themselves without fear of antitrust prosecution.

Manufacturers have been on the rebound partly because of export sales driven by the weak dollar. But increased international competition will demand new manufacturing processes. Flexible manufacturing should be part of that future, and it's good news for this new form of competitiveness that Wyden will be back in the House to push it along.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP DISCLOSURE ACT OF 1989

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, the Foreign Ownership Disclosure Act of 1989 addresses the critical need to establish a centralized and reliable source of data regarding the rapid increase in foreign ownership of U.S. farms, banks, factories, corporations, and Government securities.

This measure requires the systematic registration of most major foreign-owned interests here. For a "significant interest" of more than 5 percent in a U.S. business or real estate property valued at over $5 million the bill asks only the following information: The foreign person's address; identity; nationality; address; industry; the date the interest was acquired; the percentage of the interest and its market value; and the name location and industry of U.S. property.

For a "significant interest" of over 25 percent in the U.S. business with assets or annual sales of over $20 million the bill asks for basic financial data such as the balance sheet, income statement, statement of changes in financial condition, overall statement of sales, assets, operating income, location of U.S. facilities and the identity and nationality of the directors and officers.

Access to this data is limited to authorized persons in the Department of Commerce, General Accounting Office, designated State agencies, committees and subcommittees of Congress, and persons conducting qualified research as approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

Our Nation is selling off U.S. assets at an unprecedented pace. Foreign ownership of U.S. assets has tripled in the last 7 years, to more than $1.5 trillion. But this is only what our Government knows about—some experts believe the true figure may be twice that amount. We are using this surge of foreign capital not to promote long-term growth, but to pay for a high national lifestyle of consumption, as reflected in the unprecedented U.S. budget and trade deficits of this decade.

The rapid increase in foreign investment here may have profound implications for our economic independence, our national security, and our political sovereignty. I have introduced legislation today to equip us to make sound policy judgments based on reliable information, and I invite my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important measure. It is the intention of Senator TOM HARKIN to introduce similar legislation in the Senate later this month.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

INTRODUCTION OF CHILD DEVELOPMENT AND EDUCATION ACT

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today a major new child care initiative, the Child Development and Education Act, which I hope will provide the means for developing a bipartisan consensus on Federal support for child care. This proposal both expands the supply of quality child care as well as making child care more affordable for working families.

Public awareness of the critical need for safe, affordable quality child care has been growing as increasing numbers of women enter the work force. Five years ago, the Select Committee on Children Youth and Families issued a report stating:

As we move toward 1990 more families will need child care. We believe the situation will worsen unless parents are given more child care options and that the gap in current services will grow wider unless greater attention is paid to specific proposals, covering a wide range of public and private initiatives.

Since that time child care has become a national priority. Today, 75 percent of women with children under 6 have jobs outside the home. For many of these mothers of young children work is an economic necessity, not a luxury. Nearly 40 percent of working mothers are single, widowed, divorced, or married to men who earn less than $15,000 a year. The support which our current tax system provides for child care through the child and dependent care tax credit provides only a small portion of the actual cost of child care and barely touches low-income families—only 3 percent of the tax credit goes to the poorest 30 percent of families.

The bill that I am introducing targets resources to low-income families who benefit the least from tax proposals and for whom the lack of affordable child care represents the greatest barrier to work. Generally, families with incomes below the BLS lower living standard income—approximately $18,300 for a family of four—would be eligible for child care support. However, the bill would permit participation utilizing a sliding scale fee for families with incomes up to approximately $27,500.

My bill also recognizes that different approaches may be appropriate for different age levels—center based and family day care for infants and toddlers through public and private providers; preschool programs through an expansion of the Headstart Program, and before school and after school care utilizing the public education system.

Finally, my proposal builds on existing successful, cost-effective programs which utilize educational and developmental activities rather than merely custodial care. For example, the Headstart Program has a proven track record returning $4.75 for every $1 invested in quality preschool education.

The bill I am introducing today is a basis for future discussions. It incorporates many of the provisions of the Act for Better Child Care which was considered by the committee in the last Congress. I look forward to working closely with the author of that measure. Representative DALE KILDEE of Michigan whose leadership has brought us to this point; and the many organizations who worked so diligently to make child care a national priority. I hope that we can develop a consensus between the Congress and the administration of President-elect BUSH which reflects broad bipartisan support for the provision of adequate, affordable child care.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF CHILD DEVELOPMENT AND EDUCATION ACT OF 1989 INTRODUCED ON JANUARY 3, 1989, BY AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS, CHAIRMAN

FUNDING

There would be authorized to be appropriated $2.5 billion for fiscal year 1990, triggered by a hold harmless provision for the existing Head Start funding at the FY 1990 current services level. Such sums as may be necessary would be authorized for succeeding fiscal years.

Appropriations to carry out this act would be divided as follows:

One-third for expanded Head Start services, including activities described under Title I;

One-third for School-Based Child Care and Development, as described under Title II; and

One-third for Infant and Toddler Child Care, as described under Title III.

TITLE I—EXPANDED HEAD START SERVICES AND ACTIVITIES

Use of funds available under this title include:

Giving Head Start agencies discretion to use funds to expand existing comprehensive Head Start programs to serve greater numbers of low-income (poverty level) children. For a family of four, the 1988 poverty income guideline is approximately $11,650.

Up to 50 percent of the additional funds available to the Head Start agency could be used to extend eligibility for the full-working-day program to children of working parents below the Lower Living Standard Income Level, (LLSIL), as determined by the Bureau of Labor Standards. For a family of four, the 1988 LLSIL is approximately $18,300.

On a sliding fee scale, eligibility could also be extended to families with income between 100 and 150 percent of the LLSIL. For a family of four, 150 percent of the LLSIL would be approximately $27,450.

Enable Head Start programs to be extended from part-day to full-working-day care to meet the needs of working parents of children, generally ages 3 and 4.

Enable Head Start agencies to extend programs over summer months for children of working parents.

TITLE II—SCHOOL-BASED CHILD CARE AND DEVELOPMENT

This title would amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) providing for administration of the program by the State Education Agency (SEA), which would receive a total of 10 percent of the funds under this title: 5 percent for administration and 5 percent for training, technical assistance, etc.

Local Education Agencies (LEAs) would receive 90 percent of the funds under this title, based on the amounts each agency receives under Chapter 1.

Each LEA must meet existing State regulatory standards for health and safety.

Among the major components of each local education agency's program, and as funding permits, each LEA may offer the following services to children not already participating in Head Start:

Make available, at no cost, early childhood development programs to low-income four-year old children if family income is under the LLSIL. Such early childhood development programs would include the involvement of parents. The 1988 LLSIL for a family of four is approximately $18,300.

Adopt a sliding fee schedule to permit the participation of four-year old children from families with incomes up to 150 percent of the LLSIL. For a family of four, 150 percent of the 1988 LLSIL is approximately $27,450 per year.

Make available, at no cost, before-school and after-school care for children from families whose incomes are below the LLSIL and in which the parent or parents work or are in education or training programs. (Such children would already be attending kindergarten or elementary school classes or early childhood development programs.)

Adopt a sliding fee schedule for such children described above to participate in before-school and after-school care, if their family income is up to 150 percent of the LLSIL. For a family of four, 150 percent of the 1988 LLSIL is approximately $27,450 per year.

In addition, as funding permits, each LEA may:

Permit use of funds to train teachers in the first three grades in the principles of child development, and to train in early childhood development programs; Coordinate health and nutrition services available from other agencies; and if necessary to the program, permit funds to be used for construction and renovation.

TITLE III—INFANT AND TODDLER CHILD CARE

Funding: Through the Department of Health and Human Services, 75 percent of the funds under this title would be given to the States to contract for model center-based child care for eligible infants and toddlers, and to contract for services with individual family day care providers for child care services for infants and toddlers based on parental choice.

Contract Eligibility: Eligible recipients of grants and contracts are community-based organizations, public and private organizations, resource and referral agencies, and individual family day care providers.

Eligibility to Participate and Special Consideration: Children under three years old whose parents are working and have incomes below the LLSIL would be eligible to participate at no cost. Families between 100 and 150 percent of the LLSIL would pay based on a sliding fee scale. 100 percent of the 1988 LLSIL is approximately $18,300; 150 percent of the 1988 LLSIL is approximately $27,450.

Special consideration among eligible participants given to children from families with the lowest incomes on rural and urban areas and children of adolescent parents.

Standards: States must implement standards, developed by the Secretary with advice of National Advisory Committee for center-based care and other day care providers and for infants and toddlers.

All providers must satisfy State health and safety requirements.

Anti-Discrimination and Sectarian Language: The existing non-discrimination provisions and restrictions on sectarian activities in Subchapter B of the Human Services Authorization Act would apply to this part.

Procedural Mechanisms: A mechanism for reimbursement at the market rate for family day care providers and child care centers from the State would be established. Local advisory council and parental participation would be required. Training mechanisms would be established.

Administration: As designated by the State, the Administrating State Agency would not be permitted to use more than 5 percent of funds for administration and not more than 15 percent of funds to assist providers in meeting State health and safety requirements, resource and referral, and other support activities.

PRIVATE SECTOR INITIATIVES IN THE CHILD CARE AREA

A total of 5 percent of funds would be allocated:

Three percent of funds under this title would be set aside to encourage businesses in the State to support or provide child care services to children of working parents, including their own employees. The Governor would appoint a Business Partnership Task Force on a State-wide basis to promote and coordinate these activities.

One percent of funds under this title would be set aside to establish a Federal matching fund administered by the Secretary of HHS to match corporate grants to local child care projects ($1 for every $3 donated by the private sector up to $250,000.)

One percent of the funds under this title would be set aside to establish National Program Grants and Dissemination at the discretion of the Secretary of HHS.

EQUITABLE CENSUS COUNT

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, as the 101st Congress convenes, I want to let you know that I am reintroducing an important piece of legislation, legislation which passed both the House and Senate overwhelmingly, but was then pocket vetoed by the administration last November. H.R. 4432, which had bipartisan congressional support in the 100th Congress, would have mandated the inclusion of a checkoff system for Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders in the 1990 decenial census form.

In its 1980 census, the Census Bureau listed nine Asian American subgroups, such as Korean, Chinese, Hawaiian; and Asian Americans were asked to checkoff their appropriate category. If none of the nine applied, respondents were asked to fill in the blank labeled "other." For the 1990 census, the Census Bureau was asking for all Asian Americans to write in their subgroup.

This write-in format will lead to a serious miscount of Asian Americans. Given the language barriers faced by many Asian Americans and the immense potential for clerical error, an accurate count of Asian Americans will be impossible. If fact, the Census Bureau conceded this point to me and other legislators and committed themselves to the use of a checkoff format in the 1990 form. However, with the pocket veto of H.R. 4432, the Census Bureau has decided to review their decision to implement a checkoff system.

I am reintroducing this bill to demonstrate to the Census Bureau and to the incoming administration that there is still strong congressional support for the legislation. In addition, it is critical that Members fo Congress can count on the word of an executive agency; a sense of trust must exist between the legislative and executive branches of Government.

As elected officials, we are under an obligation to ensure that an accurate and fair census count is achieved. I strongly urge you to support this bill and demonstrate Congress' commitment to an equitable census count.

PROTECTING THE RIGHTS OF MEDICAID RECIPIENTS SEEKING ADMISSION TO LONG-TERM CARE FACILITIES

HON. DEAN A. GALLO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing legislation I sponsored during the 100th Congress to protect the rights of Medicaid recipients seeking admission to long-term care facilities.

This legislation is aimed at protecting Medicaid eligible patients from having to sign private pay contracts as a precondition of admission to a skilled nursing facility and, further, from being denied admission to a facility if they do not sign the contract.

While serving in the New Jersey Assembly, I became aware of the problem where some New Jersey nursing homes had been refusing to accept Medicaid or potential Medicaid-eligible patients unless the patient paid at the private pay level for a specific time period under a contract with the nursing home.

In response, I introduced legislation that subsequently became State law to prohibit administrators and operators or skilled nursing or intermediate care facilities from requiring incoming patients or their families to sign private pay contracts as a precondition of being accepted for future treatment under Medicaid.

There is an additional provision which, I believe, is equally important in protecting Medicaid patients from being denied admission to skilled nursing or intermediate care facilities. Specifically, New Jersey Medicaid law prohibits nursing homes from denying admission to Medicaid recipients if that nursing home has a Medicaid occupancy rate below the statewide average. Under these circumstances, the skilled nursing facility is required to accept patients on a first-come first-serve basis. The State Medicaid agency may make individual exceptions to this provision based on the licensed bed capacity of a nursing home or the financial condition of a nursing home.

The legislation I have introduced today will make this latter provision a Federal requirement. This legislation will help to ensure that admissions policies at certified extended care facilities are fair to Medicaid patients. It will also provide for greater enforcement of the current Federal law prohibiting private pay contracts as a precondition for admission.

By requiring payment of private rates or denying admission to nursing homes, our senior citizens, poor and disabled individuals and their families have been placed in a very tough position at a time when they are already under great pressure to make a decision regarding the future of a loved one.

RURAL CHALLENGE: HOSPITAL SURVIVABILITY

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, today, on the first day of the 101st Congress, I am introducing two pieces of legislation responding to the health care challenges facing rural America—the survivability of our small rural community hospitals.

In recent months, no issue has become more critical to maintaining the quality of life in rural America than health care. We see this occurring throughout our Nation, and for the first time in decades, rural Americans, young and old alike, are finding access to health care in jeopardy.

Two main elements contribute to this crisis. First, the financial and regulatory problems facing small rural hospitals. Second, a severe nurse and physician shortage practicing in rural communities.

What is hampering our hospitals is declining demand and money. Because our rural hospitals serve a higher percentage of older Americans, their major stumbling block is our Medicare reimbursement policies.

Under Federal policies, rural hospitals receive less per Medicare patient than a Medicare patient receiving care in an urban hospital. The differential in Medicare reimbursement varies from State to State, however rural hospitals receive anywhere from 20 to 40 percent less in Medicare reimbursement for medical services.

One way to assist small rural hospitals is to shorten the processing time of Medicare reimbursement payments for these hospitals. According to legislation I am introducing today, the Department of Health and Human Services Secretary would be required to provide periodic interim payments under the Medicare Program to hospitals with 100 beds or less within 10 days, rather than the current 14 days. By giving these hospitals a quicker turnaround on Medicare reimbursement we will assist them and provide for a more stable fiscal environment.

The second bill I am introducing today is the "Small Rural Hospital Preservation Act of 1989." This initiative would amend the Social Security Act and provide small, rural hospitals—100 beds or less—the option of electing to receive Medicare reimbursement on a reasonable cost basis, rather than through the current Medicare Prospective Payment System [PPS]. Since 1983, Medicare reimbursement payments have been made at predetermined rates representing the average cost in an urban or rural setting for the treatment of a Medicare patient.

Our rural hospitals are fighting every day to make ends meet while providing quality health care to rural residents. Rural health care is one of my priorities for the 101st Congress. Access to quality health care services is too important to the rural communities I represent in western Wisconsin and to the rest of our rural communities for Congress to ignore.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge our colleagues to join me as a cosponsor of these two legislative initiatives and other legislation that will be introduced in the 101st Congress exploring other alternatives responding to the challenge of hospital survivability in rural America.

INTRODUCTION OF THE PAY EQUITY TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE ACT

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am proud to introduce the Pay Equity Technical Assistance Act.

As you know, throughout the last three Congresses, a great deal of interest has been expressed in both Chambers of Congress regarding the issue of wage-based discrimination. This distinguished body has three times passed legislation mandating a study of the Federal pay and classification systems to determine if they are affected by discrimination based on race, gender or ethnicity. In the Senate, a vote last October on whether similar legislation should be considered showed that a pay equity study of the Federal work force enjoys overwhelming support in that body as well.

Pay equity has enormous support outside of Washington as well. Forty-three States, including the District of Columbia, have taken action in the area of wage discrimination, either by forming task forces or commissions to develop recommendations, by performing a study, or by implementing legislation. Many local governments and employers in the private sector have also taken positive steps toward ensuring pay equity.

As the largest employer in the United States, the Federal Government should be setting an example in terms of equity in the workplace. Yet we remain far behind State and local governments, as well as the private sector. I am disappointed by the Federal Government's reluctance to take a candid look at its own pay and classification scales. However, that hestitation cannot be used as an excuse for not encouraging the efforts and initiatives of other employers in the private and public sector.

The goal of the Pay Equity Technical Assistance Act is to make resources and assistance available to those employers who have decided to take steps to address wage inequities in their workplaces, whether it be through a study to see if such disparities actually exist or through the actual development and implementation of pay equity plans.

In order to accomplish this end, my bill would require the Secretary of Labor to develop and implement a program for the dissemination of information on efforts being made in the private and public sectors to reduce or eliminate wage disparities, to undertake and promote research into the development of techniques to reduce or eliminate such disparities, and to provide appropriate technical assistance to employers who are interested in correcting discriminatory wage-setting practices.

Our Federal Government must take this kind of leadership role in securing economic justice. We have already laid a strong foundation. The Equity Pay Act of 1963 requires equal pay for equal work. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, sex, or physical disabilities.

Those laws were, and continue to be, important milestones. But we cannot give up the fight. Twenty-five years after the passage of the most comprehensive civil rights legislation of our history, we must ensure that its goals are being attained, that we are living up to the standards that we set for ourselves.

The reality of the situation is not encouraging. While women now constitute 45 percent of the work force, they make only 65 cents for every dollar that men make. Opponents of pay equity insist that this is due to the "market forces" of supply and demand and other factors such as education and skill. But the fact of the matter is that market forces don't always explain the wage gap. At this time, for example, there is a critical shortage of nurses in the United States. Estimates range from 130,000 to 200,000, and many are predicting that the situation will get worse before it gets better. The Secretary of Health and Human Services has stated that by the year 2000, we will have a shortage of 400,000 nurses in this country. Yet, despite this huge demand, registered nurses continue to earn, on average, only $22,000 per year.

Education also often means little in wage setting. On average, women with college degrees who work full-time, year-round, are earning the same amount as male high school dropouts.

We are witnessing a dramatic change in the face of our Nation's history and its day-to-day world as more and more women enter the work force. Now, more than ever, we cannot forget two very important ideas. The first deals with the principles of our Nation. In 1964, we stated quite definitely that justice required discrimination be eliminated in the workplace. Discrimination in pay is a very real and very painful denial of justice, and it continues to affect millions of men and women. We cannot tolerate that kind of affront to the principles of our Nation.

The second deals with the economic needs of our future. We cannot afford the discouragement and apathy that discrimination breeds. We need women in the work force. Both for our Nation's productivity and for the health and welfare of its families. To pay them fairly can only help the economic future of our Nation.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, pay equity is not a liberal issue. It is not a conservative issue. It is an issue of fairness. I look forward to swift consideration of the Pay Equity Technical Assistance Act and urge my colleagues' strong support for this bill.

OREGON LEADERS OPPOSED TO WNP-1 CONVERSION

HON. LES AuCOIN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, last month Oregonians were given the opportunity to make initial comments on the Department of Energy's plans to build new nuclear weapons production facilities, and with near unanimity they said "no" to the idea of making the Washington Public Power Supply System's mothballed WNP-1 reactor a tritium production facility.

Oregon Secretary of State Barbara Roberts put the case very bluntly: The Department of Energy should clean up the mess it has already created at Hanford before it even begins to consider what, if any, new production facilities are needed.

I couldn't agree with her more—in fact, my own statement at the Energy Department's Portland hearing last month reached the same conclusion. And, Oregon Gov. Neil Goldschmidt concurs.

Leading Oregon public officials like Neil Goldschmidt and Barbara Roberts have been fighting for a greater Federal commitment to defense waste cleanup at Hanford, and other public officials around the country are following their leadership. In Congress, Senator HATFIELD and I have translated this fight into more cleanup funds for Hanford, but much, much more needs to be done.

Mr. Speaker, I commend Secretary Roberts and Governor Goldschmidt for making it clear that Oregonians want national security to include protection from threats of radioactive and toxic contamination caused by defense materials production.

I include Secretary Roberts' testimony in the RECORD.

TESTIMONY BEFORE THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY BY HON. BARBARA ROBERTS, SECRETARY OF STATE, STATE OF OREGON, ON BEHALF OF GOV. NEIL GOLDSCHMIDT, DECEMBER 6, 1988

I am Barbara Roberts, Oregon Secretary of State.

I speak today in my role as Vice-Chair of Oregon's Hanford Nuclear Waste Board and on behalf of Governor Neil Goldschmidt, whom I represent on that board. I am here to deliver a very short, very simple message.

First, I want to thank you for bringing this important forum to the people of Oregon today. We welcome the opportunity to help the U.S. Department of Energy understand what Oregonians think about critical issues of our times.

Mister Chairman, there is a far, far more compelling issue at Hanford.

That issue is the Nation's largest single concentration of radioactive wastes—wastes that have been accumulating at Hanford for more than four decades. Nuclear weapons wastes at Hanford present an unprecedented peril to our people and to our environment.

Hanford's nuclear weapons wastes are in shallow burial pits, in trenches, and in underground tanks. Many of those tanks have already leaked. Some of the tanks leaked after only 20 years in the ground—and yet, they contain wastes that will be dangerous for 10,000 years.

If spread over an area the size of a football field, the total volume of this intensely radioactive waste would be 150 feet deep! The less radioactive, but longer-lived plutonium wastes, would double this volume.

One might believe that a hazard so lethal would have prompted Congress and the U.S. Department of Energy to clean up the mess long ago.

But, the fact is that, until the last two years, Congress had never appropriated a dime for disposal of Hanford's dangerous nuclear weapons wastes. And, even now, most of the appropriated money is being used by U.S. DOE to maintain and store the new wastes that Hanford continues to produce every day.

At today's level of funding, we would not begin to actually affect previously accumulated nuclear weapons wastes until next year and, at that rate, it would take several hundred years to complete the job. That is absolutely unacceptable.

Thanks to Senator Hatfield, Representative AuCoin, and the combined Oregon and Washington congressional delegations, last year U.S. DOE was forced to accept more funding for moving ahead with nuclear weapons clean-up.

But what we have, so far, is only a drop in the bucket. U.S. DOE estimates that it will cost up to $60 billion to clean up all the weapons wastes at Hanford. Even if we assume 30 years to complete that job, it would still require more than $2 billion per year.

I know that you are aware that Governor Booth Gardner of Washington and Governor Neil Goldschmidt of Oregon joined forces in 1987 and again in 1988 to urge Congress to make firm commitments to long term financing for Hanford cleanup. I hope U.S. DOE is convinced—as it should be—that these two governors are not going to back down on this issue. Hanford must be cleaned up!

I should note that it is my belief that the people who work at Hanford are far more aware of the need than is U.S. DOE's Washington, D.C. headquarters.

The Environmental Impact Statement issued by U.S. DOE's Richland operations office on clean-up outlines an effective plan. But, the Northwest feels strongly that we must be assured of clean up of these wastes is the very first priority before U.S. DOE considers going forward to make new wastes.

It has been suggested, in some quarters, that nuclear weapons wastes clean up at Hanford will never occur if production of nuclear weapons material is not restored at Hanford. This belief stems from the fear that no one will want to pay billions for clean up if it is not tied to production. That simply makes no sense. We've had production for 40 years and there has been almost no progress on clean up.

Very simply, if we cannot take care of the mess already made, why should we create more wastes and delude ourselves that future wastes will be cleaned up?

We, in Oregon, find this situation ironic, at best: We are debating the means to produce weapons in the name of national defense. At the same time, we leave ourselves defenseless against the lethal by-products of nuclear weapons production. Oregonians are not amused that we may spend billions on Star Wars to protect us against nuclear warheads from the sky, while a very real nuclear threat seeps toward the Columbia River.

If you want a Hanford message from Oregon, hear this: Clean up the nuclear weapons wastes at Hanford. Get that stuff away from the Columbia River, away from the local ground water, and away from our people.

Then—and only then—can there be any intelligent conversation about a facility to produce new nuclear weapons wastes.

THE 20TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ORIENTAL DAILY NEWS

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to offer a few words in honor of the Oriental Daily News, Hong Kong's most widely read newspaper, which will celebrate its 20th anniversary on January 22. This event is of even more interest, because Oriental Daily News plans to open a North American edition in the near future. I am confident that such a step would help to improve the United States-Hong Kong relations.

I got to know the newspaper when I visited Hong Kong in July 1988. During that stay I had the opportunity to speak with Ma Ching Kwan, chairman of the newspaper. I was impressed to see how many people in the city were reached by this Chinese language publication. Over 41 percent of the population of Hong Kong reads Oriental Daily News, which has a daily circulation of over 2 million copies, rivaling and surpassing some of the world's leading newspapers.

Mr. Speaker, the Oriental Daily News has the largest reporting and editing staff of any paper in Hong Kong; it gains over 35 percent of all advertising revenues in Hong Kong, and the paper has won a reputation as an independent voice in Hong Kong that links between the populace and the government.

But Oriental Daily News also offers high-quality journalism. As a broad-based, family-oriented newspaper, it boasts a variety of interesting news stories and features. It is commendable that the readers can buy this good mixture of current news and background stories for a reasonable price. I also appreciate that Oriental Daily News had been quite active in fundraising activities and distributed millions of dollars to the handicapped and accident victims.

Mr. Speaker, I call on my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in congratulating the Oriental Daily News on the occasion of its 20th anniversary.

MEDICARE ELIGIBILITY FOR PERSONS WITH AIDS

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing legislation which would provide urgently needed Medicare benefits to many individuals suffering from AIDS—acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Persons with AIDS fall victim not only to a fatal disease, but also to catastrophic medical bills which many are unable to pay. As estimated by a number of health care cost studies, the average total bill for hospital inpatient care from the time of diagnosis until death ranges from $40,000 to $70,000. This does not include expenses for outpatient, nursing, and home health care. The costs of care for AIDS patients tend to be high because these individuals often require successive admissions to hospitals, longer stays due to severe medical complications, more intensive nursing care, and more expensive pharmaceuticals, supplies, and special equipment.

Medicaid pays for the health care of 40 percent of all patients with AIDS. Of the remaining 60 percent, most are unable to pay the astronomical health care costs. Many have lost private health insurance because their debilitating condition leaves them unable to work. Others have exhausted their insurance coverage because of the catastrophic nature of their illness. And many may be unable to obtain individual private health insurance, because some insurance companies are questioning their obligation to provide coverage for AIDS patients.

The legislation I am reintroducing would expedite the availability of Medicare benefits to those AIDS patients who, under current law, already qualify for its coverage by virtue of their disabled status. AIDS patients who are unable to work and have contributed the requisite number of quarters into Social Security, are eligible for the Social Security Disability Insurance [SSDI] Program. In fact, in 1983, the Department of Health and Human Services added AIDS to its list of qualifying impairments for disability to help in the processing of these cases.

Once entitled to disability benefits, AIDS patients, like all SSDI recipients, must then wait 2 years before they can receive Medicare coverage. Unfortunately, individuals afflicted with this terrible disorder often die before they can qualify for coverage. Only about 28 percent of all persons with AIDS are still alive 2 years after their condition is diagnosed.

The National Academy of Sciences/Institute of Medicine reports on AIDS published in 1986 and 1988 noted the problem of the unavailability of Medicare for eligible AIDS patients in their recommendations for potential AIDS health care financing sources. The legislation that I am reintroducing would provide Medicare financing to these eligible AIDS patients and assure them access to health care without the threat of bankruptcy.

My bill would also give desperately needed assistance to localities which have been bearing the financial burden of providing services and health care to those affected by this epidemic. To cope with AIDS, many of our cities are drawing on already scarce economic, medical, technical, and human resources.

This bill does not set up a new program or confer a new entitlement on any group. It merely assures that AIDS patients have access to Federal health benefits to which they are entitled. One reason the Congress established the 2-year waiting period was to ensure that Medicare would only be available to those whose disabilities proved to be severe. There is no question that AIDS sufferers meet this condition. Even though, with the aid of AZT and better treatments for opportunistic infections, persons with AIDS are beginning to live longer, still, few are alive 2 years after diagnosis, and tragically, no one has yet recovered from full-blown AIDS. Only an estimated 1 to 3 percent of persons with AIDS receive Medicare benefits.

Under this legislation, the Secretary of Health and Human Services would, at his or her discretion, be authorized to provide Medicare reimbursement for experimental treatments that are administered as part of an approved clinical protocol. Because there are few treatments for AIDS, much of the medical care involves therapies that are experimental. In view of the uniqueness of this disease, its fatal consequences, and the uncertainties surrounding treatment, the bill would provide important flexibility to the Secretary to determine the need and appropriateness of reimbursing for experimental care.

Mr. Speaker, a growing number of American men and women, from all walks of life, are suffering from this frightening disease. AIDS knows no boundaries and shuns no group. It has afflicted citizens across the entire country and from every economic and racial group. I believe the Federal Government must ensure that victims of this epidemic do not want for medical care because they lack sufficient resources. The Congress must continue to demonstrate its leadership in fighting this epidemic, not only by funding research and public education, but also by helping provide essential health care to those who are living with AIDS.

The text of the bill follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. 5-YEAR WAIVER OF 24-MONTH WAITING PERIOD FOR MEDICARE ELIGIBILITY FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH AIDS.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, an individual will be presumed to have acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) if the individual has been diagnosed, in accordance with standards established by the Secretary after consultation with the Director of the Centers for Disease Control, as having such disease.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE AND 5-YEAR SUNSET.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the first day of the first month that begins more than 45 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and shall apply to services furnished during the five-year period beginning on that first day.

"(j) In making determinations under subsection (a)(1)(A) in the case of expenses incurred for items and services furnished in the treatment of acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS), the Secretary shall take into account, and find as reasonable and necessary, a treatment that is experimental in nature if the treatment is in accordance with a clinical protocol recognized as appropriate by the Secretary.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to items and services furnished on or after the first day of the first month that begins more than 45 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

LONG ROAD TO ERA

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, the road to equal rights for women has been a long one. Gathered in Seneca Falls, NY, in 1848, women used the Declaration of Independence as a model to argue for the first time for full rights as American citizens.

Seventy-two years later, in 1920, women finally gained the first right of citizenship—the right to vote—after overcoming enormous opposition. Opponents claimed that women's suffrage would not help women, but would destroy them, the family, and the Nation. Today we know how silly those arguments were.

Yet we hear the same tired arguments against the equal rights amendment. Instead of recognizing that American women are entitled as part of their birthright to full rights of citizenship, we hear contradictory arguments that ERA is either not needed, because the States will do it, or that it would destroy women, the family, and our country.

Only one woman at the Seneca Falls meeting lived to see women get the vote. The equal rights amendment was first introduced in Congress in 1923, on the 75th anniversary of Seneca Falls. Another 75 years have passed since then. Women have waited long enough: the ERA needs to be incorporated into our Constitution now.

ERA is more than a symbol of full citizenship. Yes; there are laws protecting women from discrimination in employment, education, credit, and so forth. But enforcement of those laws is subject to the whim of every administration. We have seen in recent years that the commitment to eradicate discrimination is not always there. Then the signal goes out that if it's OK for the Federal Government to back off of its commitment, it's OK for others, too.

The ERA would stand as a permanent, unassailable commitment by creating a constitutional standard of equality against which the actions of Congress, Federal and State and local governments and ultimately the private sector would have to be measured.

Following is the text of the joint resolution I have introduced proposing an amendment to the Constitution relative to equal rights for men and women.

H.J. RES. —

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission by the Congress:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

"SECTION 2. The Congress shall have the power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

"SECTION 3. This article shall take effect two years after the date of ratification.".

THE DECEPTIVE MAILINGS PREVENTION ACT OF 1989

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, along with 29 of my colleagues, the Deceptive Mailings Prevention Act of 1989. This is essentially the same legislation that I introduced in the last Congress and which was passed in the House under suspension of the rules. I was pleased that this measure received the overwhelming support of my colleagues because I know that this legislation will provide important protection for all those individuals who receive mailings from organizations that purport to be associated with the Federal Government.

Over the last few years, increasing numbers of organizations have used the mail to offer services or to solicit support in a variety of areas. While many of these groups provide a needed service, some have used deceptive or misleading mailings as a means of influencing people to open their mail. For example, many envelopes announce that important Medicare information is inside, while others mimic envelopes used by Government agencies.

In some cases, groups have indicated that they could provide a service for a fee when in fact that service is already available free of charge from the Federal Government. Some offer to check an individual's Social Security earnings record, while others offer to obtain Social Security cards for a fee. Many people do not know that these services are already available from the Social Security Administration, a fact which is not mentioned anywhere in the mailing. As a consequence, people of all ages mistakenly purchase services that are not substantially different from those available free of charge.

My bill would require that nongovernmental organizations which use a seal or insignia, or which use terms that imply Federal Government connection, such as the Internal Revenue Service, Medicare, and Social Security, would have to include on their envelopes a disclaimer informing the recipient that this is not a Government document. On the face of their printed materials, a disclaimer would also be required to indicate that the product or service being offered is neither offered, approved, nor endorsed by the Federal Government.

In a similar vein, this legislation would provide for a disclaimer on the face of mailed materials offered for a fee when these products or services are substantially the same as those offered either free of charge or at a lower price by the Federal Government. In this way, if individuals choose to purchase these types of services, they will be doing so as informed consumers.

The Deceptive Mailings Prevention Act of 1989 is not designed to limit access to services by individuals, or to prohibit solicitations by nongovernmental organizations; nor is it designed to penalize legitimate organizations. Indeed, organizations that have been chosen as agents or licensees of the Federal Government are specifically exempt from the provisions of this bill. The goal of the Deceptive Mailings Prevention Act of 1989 is to assure that those who receive mailings are not misled into believing that free services can only be obtained for a fee or that services, products, or solicitations have been endorsed by the Federal Government.

We owe it to all of our citizens to provide protections against the misuse of the mail. I applaud my colleagues for their strong statement on this issue last year and I look forward to your equally strong support again in this Congress.

MAYOR LIVINGSTON'S "YEARS OF SUCCESS"

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, Mayor George Livingston of Richmond, CA, has been a close friend of mine for many years as he has served with great distinction, as councilman and mayor of the city in which I was born.

Over the course of the past 3 years, during which he has served as mayor, he has led the effort to revitalize the city, and with impressive results. Economic development, transportation improvements, and administrative innovations are earning Richmond long overdue recognition, and improving the quality of government and of life for Richmond's residents. A great deal of the credit for those accomplishments are attributable to the work of Major Livingston, and the leadership he has provided together with members of the city council, and other elected leaders and private citizens in the city.

Mayor Livingston's outstanding record was justifiable praised in a recent editorial in the West County Times, which I would like to share with Members of the House today.

The editorial, from the December 15, 1988, edition of the West County Times, follows:

LIVINGSTON'S YEARS OF SUCCESS

Three years ago, George Livingston was elected mayor of Richmond in an acrimonious campaign, Livingston came out of that election with a pledge that he would try to bring the diverse factions of the Richmond City Council together, He also had a list of major city problems he wanted to attack.

Livingston, a 39-year resident of the city who was elected with a 57 percent vote, has measurable success to show on all fronts.

As Richmond's first elected black mayor, he has resisted some pressures from the black community to focus on its problems and has run an administration for all residents.

The council, while still having some differences, is much more inclined today than it was three years ago to work together on problems and to take advantage of the growing perception of Richmond as a good place to live and do business. The environment is such that investors and developers who once ignored Richmond are now interested and going ahead with projects. Livingston was interested in creating a more positive image for the city, and the investor and developer response demonstrates some success in that area.

Some fun was poked at the mayor for another goal, cleaning up Cutting Boulevard. However, his perception that the boulevard and its environs were the only part of Richmond seen by many people headed for the Richmond-San Rafael Bridge was acculate.

Work remains to be done, but the clusters of people outside Cutting Boulevard business, establishments have been reduced, Livingston's personal intervention was a factor in the reduction and in some of the other cleanup that has taken place.

The mayor has a faculty for working with people, and he has been known to get out of his car in a neighborhood and approach individual residents to suggest that they paint a house or clean a yard.

As another part of the cleanup effort, the city, under Livingston's administration, has responded to citizen complaints by setting up special cleanup teams that do nothing but pick up debris on a timely basis.

During Livingston's watch, the city has hired a new city manager, and an administrative reorganization is in progress designed to make City Hall more responsive to public needs.

The council has came to grips with the realities of redeveloping the former Downtown and has scaled down its goals. Developers have responded.

Terminal No. 3, the container operation, has been a drain on city resources that resulted in the port operating at an overall loss. The city addressed that by buying out the existing contract and obtaining a new operator that guarantees Richmond a profit from Terminal No. 3 as well as paying for the buyout.

Livingston has employed his 12 years' prior experience on the council, service on the state Democratic Central Committee and service on other boards and commissions to successfully represent the city at the state and federal level in its quest for funds for housing, the harbor, freeways and manpower training.

And results are beginning to show in Livingston's last and most difficult goal—the reduction of drug trafficking in the city. The effort must be a sustained and intensive one, but already police and citizen efforts are showing results of four of the city's heaviest drug trafficking locations.

Obviously, the mayor has not accomplished any of this by himself. But his conciliatory approach and ability to serve as a catalyst have been important, Richmond is better off for having had George Livingston as mayor for the last three years.

THE GROWING CRISIS IN THE THRIFT INDUSTRY

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, the 101st Congress convenes today faced with a number of pressing national problems. None, however, carries more potential for damage to our economy than the growing crisis in the thrift industry. The events of the past 10 days, in which the Federal Home Loan Bank Board sold dozens of savings and loans at firesale prices, only underscores the extent of the problem.

During 1988, the Board took over 222 thrifts, with assets totaling $90 billion. The cost to the Federal Government—that is the American taxpayer—amounts to a minimum of $38.6 billion, and probably a good deal more in future years.

During the previous Congress, my House Banking Committee delved into the S&L crisis and began the difficult work to find a solution. Legislation was approved to give the Board authority for stopgap measures to prevent a collapse of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, which liabilities for insured accounts in troubled institutions now amount to $60 to $80 billion more than its assets.

But it is the spectacle of last week's financial feeding frenzy at the Bank Board which brings home the nature of the problem, and the need for new leadership in this issue.

Contrary to the blandly reassuring statements by the Bank Board, the sales of bankrupt S&L's do not end the Federal Government's liability. First, in many of the deals the Bank Board retains part ownership, which has been financed in many instances with promissory notes—borrowed money which will have to be repaid. Additional notes have been issued to add to the balance sheets of the failed institutions. Finally, in some of the deals, the Bank Board has given the purchasers guarantees against future losses in taking over the institutions—some running 10 years.

Thus, the $38.6 billion cost announced on Friday is just a minimum. Moreover, these outlays and the future obligations have a significant impact on the Federal budget and deficit. Promissory notes, which the Bank Board contends are guaranteed by the Federal Government, add directly and immediately to Federal spending, and to the deficit. The guarantees against future losses also are considered Federal obligations, and become outlays and debt when they are exercised.

All in all, we have a situation where the Bank Board is dragging us even deeper into a financial black hole. Yet, under current law it has unprecedented authority to commit the American taxpayer to billions of dollars in obligations, but without any effective control. The Board is even free from the Apportionment Act, which is the President's main fiscal management tool.

Clearly, we need fundamental changes, not only to solve the immediate problem of some 200 hopelessly insolvent thrifts in which depositors have federally insured funds, but also to prevent any reoccurrence. When the 101st Congress constitutes its committees, we must begin at once to address these problems squarely. The Bush administration must play a constructive role, bringing to us its options.

This will take some weeks, perhaps even months. In the meantime, the Bank Board will continue to function without control. In considering how to bring some measure of immediate protection for the taxpayer, I have written to the Attorney General, requesting him to use his authority as our chief law enforcement officer to determine whether the Bank Board is acting in the public interest. I have specifically recommended that he review the sales announced last week and move for injunctions against them if they are not in the public interest. A copy of my letter is included, for the information of my colleagues.

As we search for a solution to the crisis in the thrift industry, we must remember that the American taxpayer already is paying too much for a bloated and inefficient Federal Government. We have made some progress in the past several years in curtailing the growth in spending. However, if we are not careful, the S&L crisis will cancel out all our good work of the past several years and put us back on a course of fiscal disaster.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
December 30, 1988.

HON. RICHARD THORNBURGH,
Attorney General of the United States, Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: The recent actions by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board in making agreements for the sale of insolvent savings and loan institutions raise serious questions whether the Board is properly and prudently carrying out its responsibility under federal law.

As a member of the House Banking Committee, I am deeply concerned about the terms of these sales. Institutions with billions of dollars in assets evidently are being sold for minimal cash payments, coupled with generous tax benefits. The Board also has provided some purchasers with open-ended guarantees against losses.

To finance its participation in these sales and to augment the balance sheets of the institutions, the Board has issued billions of dollars in debt, which the Board contends is federally guaranteed as well. This debt adds directly to the federal budget and the federal deficit.

Even though the federal statutes governing the Board and the FSLIC authorize actions to protect the deposit insurance fund and our thrift system, the Board also must meet the test of prudence to which all government officials are required to adhere.

This is particularly a concern in view of the magnitude of the transactions and the continuing question about the Board's authority to grant federal guarantees.

Accordingly, I request that you review the Board's actions in these sales and, under your authority as the chief federal law enforcement officer, act to insure that the Board carries out its responsibility in accordance with federal law and the requirements of federal officials to protect the public interest.

If you determine that the public interest is not being protected, then I urge you to seek injunctions against these sales, so that the public is not indebted to any improper or imprudent actions by the Board. In my judgment, this is the minimum that can be done immediately to protect the American people and the taxpayer.

I would appreciate having your assessment of this situation at your earliest possible opportunity. The House Banking Committee will begin an examination of these questions next month, and your response will be a significant contribution to our work.

Sincerely,

TOBY ROTH,
Member of Congress.

PUBLIC PRODUCTIVITY ACT: A SPECIFIC INFRASTRUCTURE PROPOSAL

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, it has been 7 years since the book "America in Ruins," by Pat Choate and Susan Walters, first raised to national consciousness the deteriorating condition of our Nation's public capital resources, and made "infrastructure" a fitting topic for the front cover of Newsweek, and for feature articles in U.S. News & World Report and Time magazines.

The National Council on Public Works Improvement, in its major report to the Nation released last February, advised that "America's public works are barely adequate to meet current needs and insufficient to support economic growth." Yet the Nation has no comprehensive program to rehabilitate, repair and renovate our portfolio of public capital resources: our roads and streets, highways and bridges, our water supply and wastewater facilities, our public buildings, and other publicly owned facilities.

The legislation I introduce today would provide the seeds of that overall program, for consideration along with other infrastructure measures which I expect will be before the Public Works and Transportation Committee during the 101st Congress.

As the initial multitrillion dollar infrastructure maintenance and rehabilitation estimates were announced, I asked the U.S. Conference of Mayors and the League of Cities to survey their members, to determine, first, how cities handle their infrastructure decisionmaking and financing, and second, the condition of municipal public facilities around the country.

The results were heartening. The survey, "Capital Budgeting and Infrastructure in American Cities: an Initial Assessment," indicated that over 90 percent of those 800 cities responding do use some sort of capital budgeting or some similar orderly decisionmaking process. Further, the survey indicated that infrastructure is a national issue, which is important to all regions of the country, not just the older ones. It also revealed that cities' infrastructure needs vary widely, although priorities cluster in a relatively few general categories such as streets and roads, waste water treatment, storm water collection, and sewers. Cities vary greatly in their ability to finance infrastructure needs, and these needs cannot be met in many cases without Federal and State assistance.

Most important, however, the survey showed that while infrastructure needs are great, we need not be paralyzed by their magnitude. We can break the task down into manageable proportions.

The bill I introduce today will not solve the entire infrastructure problem in this country. Nor can Federal grants do the job alone. I expect the bill which ultimately comes to the House floor will be far more comprehensive than a grants program.

I am convinced, however, that a grant program to help distressed areas repair and improve their infrastructure is a necessary component of a more comprehensive approach to the overall problem.

The importance of maintaining our public capital portfolio goes beyond eradication of potholes and patching of pipe. The future economic well-being of our country depends on sound, adequate public capital facilities, the underpinning for all our private endeavors. Private productivity, which is the quintessential element in keeping our Nation preeminent as an economic force in the world, depends ultimately on public productivity. Industry and business won't expand, and certainly won't locate, in communities where water and sewer capacity aren't adequate, and where raw materials and finished products can't be easily or competitively transported.

Today, as many as half to three-quarters of our communities cannot expand because their infrastructure is inadequate to accommodate new growth.

Increasingly, the private sector is recognizing this interdependence between public infrastructure and private growth. In Cleveland, industry took the lead in supporting a tax increase, provided that half that increase would be dedicated to public capital repairs. Seattle's businessmen, at the invitation of their mayor, fully reviewed the city's budget, and ended up supporting a business tax increase for public facilities repair.

The bill I introduced today has two purposes: one, to protect our priceless existing investment in public capital, which American citizens have built with their tax dollars over the entire life of this country, by reversing the neglect and negative investment of the last several decades; and two, to prevent future neglect, by assisting owners and operators of public facilties to establish long-term Capital Improvement Programs to assure maintenance and upkeep of this great resource.

The Infrastructure Improvement and Public Productivity Act of 1989 is a multiyear, one-shot catch-up program to assist owners and operators of public capital in restoring private productivity by ungrading local public facilities and making them more productive. This bill would provide $2 billion per year in grants, on a 50–50 matching basis, to distressed areas to repair, renovate, reconstruct, or construct public facilities which contribute to that area's economic growth and development.

Eligible recipients would be owners and operators of economic development-related public facilities: States, counties, townships, municipalities, and special districts such as water and sewer districts and port authorities.

Funds would be apportioned to reward States and other levels of government making the greatest effort to preserve their own public facilities; and to target areas where the needs are the greatest.

The second major innovative feature of this bill is the Capital Budgeting and Capital Improvement Programs requirements I referred to above. This is an extremely important element of the program, in that it is the means to assure that owners and operators will establish and maintain an orderly schedule for protecting their capital plants.

Once funds have been allocated to the States, the Governor is required to set aside 1 percent of that allocation for Capital Budgeting and Capital Improvement Programs. The State itself, and any local government, could receive a grant on a one-time basis to develop a Capital Improvement Program.

The National Council on Governmental Accounting has defined a Capital Improvements Program as "a plan for capital expenditures to be incurred each year over a fixed period of years to meet capital needs arising from the long-term work program or otherwise. It sets forth each project or other contemplated expenditure in which the local government is to have a part and specifies the full resources estimated to be available to finance the projected expenditures."

Capital Improvement Programs vary from the simple to the extremely complex, depending on the size of the governmental unit and the sophistication of the participants. The CIP is usually for 5 to 6 years. Capital improvements programming is the multiyear scheduling of capital improvements ranked in order of priority, an identification of all possible funding sources, an analysis of the financing capability of the local government, and a schedule or timetable for development.

In many cases, the first year of the CIP is called the capital budget, which refers to those capital improvements that are programmed for the next fiscal year. A capital budget can generally be thought of as the link between the longer-term Capital Improvements Program and the current annual budget and appropriation process used by most governmental units. Most governmental units update the CIP annually.

An important distinction between the capital budget and the Capital Improvements Program is that the 1-year capital budget is a part of the legally adopted annual operating budget, while the longer-term CIP does not have legally binding significance.

A Capital Improvements Program for all an owner/operator's public facilities would be the condition for receiving funding under this program for repair or improvement of a single project or element in that overall program.

I want to note also that this bill will dovetail nicely with the National Development Investment Act, which passed the House in the 100th Congress by a margin of 330 to 89 and which I am reintroducing today. That bill requires communities to design development investment strategies as a prerequisite for individual projects. These strategies will be important components of the Capital Improvements Programs developed under this legislation.

I put this bill forward to initiate debate on a concrete proposal, and look forward to full discussion of all the issues this legislation raises.

The bill looks to the future in its establishment of a pattern of Capital Budgeting and Capital Improvement Programming, so that, once an area has "caught up" with its deferred infrastructure needs, it won't go back to its old ways of doing business, and allow its newly refurbished facilities to deteriorate again.

This is an ambitious bill, and I do not pretend that it is the final product. Rather, I introduce it as the subject of what I anticipate will be extensive and lively debate. I will welcome comment from all sides on it.

INFRASTRUCTURE IMPROVEMENT AND PUBLIC PRODUCTIVITY ACT

PURPOSE

To establish a multiyear infrastructure repair program by assisting State and local governments in addressing the urgent need to repair and rehabilitate aging public facilities and to encourage the establishment of captial improvement programs that include life-cycle maanagement of capital improvement.

WHAT THE BILL DOES

The Act would authorize $2 billion annually for a period of five years for 50% grants to States, Territories, Counties, Municipalities, Townships, Special Districts, and Authorities for the construction, renovation, reconstruction, and repair of public facilities that are located in or will substantially benefit UDAG (Urban Development Action Grant) eligible areas.

ELIGIBLE PROJECTS

Grants would be available for the construction, renovation, and repair of public facilities such as any road, street, bridge, water or wastewater-treatment system, building, and other facility related to the economic development of the area.

LIMITATIONS

Grant can only be made if project is part of capital improvement program; enhances economic development opportunities; contributes substantially to the economic development of the area; is not inconsistent with areawide plans; applicant demonstrates maintenance of effort; could not otherwise be done; and applicant demonstrates compliance with Davis-Bacon Act.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

One percent set-aside of funds appropriated for Secretary to conduct research for improving productivity, management, and extending useful life of public facilities and for the development of new materials, technologies and methods for repairing public facilities.

One fourth of 1 percent set-aside, each for Puerto Rico and the Territories;

Funds to be allocated to each of the States by a formula which considers population, fiscal capacity, tax effort, and capital expenditures; and

One percent set-aside of funds allocated to each State to be used to make grants to establish and improve capital budgeting and capital improvement programs. Economic Development Districts and Areawide Planning Agencies may be used for this purpose.

CONGRESSMAN BARTLETT INTRODUCES THE SOCIAL SECURITY WORK INCENTIVES ACT OF 1989

HON. STEVE BARTLETT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, today, Congressmen LEVIN, ARCHER, MATSUI, and I, along with a total of 94 House Members are introducing legislation entitled, the Social Security Work Incentives Act of 1989. This legislation removes an essential disincentive to work by allowing SSDI recipients who do return to work and earn above the SGA level ($300 per month) to be considered "disabled and working."

Eighteen months ago Congress enacted Public Law 99-643, the Employment Opportunities for Disabled Americans Act. This law eliminates work disincentives for supplemental security income [SSI] recipients who want to accept a job without losing their health care benefits.

Data from the Social Security Administration shows that this legislation is having its intended effect. Participation in the 1619(a) program (receiving cash benefits and Medicaid) has increased dramatically since July 1987, when Public Law 99-643 took effect. All persons in the "trial work" status at the end of June 1987 are now in the 1619(a) program. Participation in the 1619(b) program (continued Medicaid coverage only) has increased by 31 percent since July 1987. Passage of this legislation has provided work incentives for the disabled.

But Public Law 99-643 is not enough. It only applies to persons with disabilities who participate in the SSI Program. This work incentive should be extended to persons who participate in the Social Security Disability Insurance [SSDI] program.

Under this bill, when an SSDI recipient returns to work, regardless of whether his earnings would place him in the "disabled and working" status, his monthly benefit will be reduced by $1 for every $2 earned, after exclusion of the first $85 and impairment-related work expenses. The person will be permitted to stay in the "disabled and working" status as long as he continues to have the disabling impairment that is the basis of his eligibility. This is parallel to section 1619 in the SSI program.

The real disincentive in current law, though, is a loss of medical benefits rather than cash benefits. Under the 1619 program, the SSI recipient continues to receive Medicaid upon returning to work, but SSDI participants in similar circumstances cannot receive Medicare.

SSDI recipients do not have access to Medicaid coverage, but are instead covered, after a 2-year waiting period, by Medicare. Under current law, SSDI recipients who return to work are covered by Medicare for 48 months and are then shut off. This legislation will allow SSDI recipients in the "disabled and working" status to continue to receive Medicare benefits for 48 months and be able to buy into Medicare once the 48-month period is exhausted.

The buy-in arrangement is outlined as follows:

The State Medicaid Plan would pay the Medicare premium for individuals with earnings below 150 percent of the poverty line ($8,655 for 1987) and individuals who meet the SSI resource test.

The State Medicaid Plan would pay a portion of the Medicare premium and the individual would pay the rest if the individual's earnings are between 150 percent and 300 percent of the poverty line ($8,655 to $17,310 for 1987).

Individuals whose earnings are above 300 percent of the poverty line would pay the entire Medicare premium.

Other provisions of the legislation would: First, provide for automatic reinstatement for those individuals whose income fluctuates; second, allow an individual who is working and receiving disability benefits on the date of enactment not to be subject to these rules if his income does not exceed 80 percent of substantial gainful activity [SGA]; and third, and allow individuals to retain SSI eligibility for Medicaid even though they receive SSDI benefits based on their parents' retirement, disability, or death.

The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that this legislation will cost $310 million over 5 years. This estimate is based on the number of new recipients, 75,000 over 10 years, that will come onto the SSDI rolls as a result of this legislation. However, the CBO estimate does not include the increases in general revenues from income and employment taxes that will result if this legislation is enacted. I also believe the bill will generate savings to the Disability Insurance Fund through reduced benefits payments. In addition, the legislation will reduce Medicare costs because it requires employers to cover their disabled workers under their employment-based health plan with Medicare as the secondary payor.

In 1987, 2.8 million disabled people received SSDI benefits and approximately 33 percent were under age 45. Under the present system, only one-half of 1 percent of these workers are returning to the work force. SSDI recipients under age 45 are in their prime working years and could contribute substantially to our economy if they could return to work. If this legislation can double that percent, it will be a tremendous success.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this legislation. It will promote employment among persons with disabilities by removing a major disincentive which currently exists in the SSDI program.

NATIONAL FLOOD INSURANCE PROGRAM AMENDMENTS

HON. WALTER B. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the National Flood Insurance Program amendments for coastal homeowners along with my colleague from Michigan, Congressman FRED UPTON. This bill provides for an extension of payments authorized under section 1306(c) of the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968. Congressman UPTON and I coauthorized this provision during consideration of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987—Public Law 100-242.

Section 544 of Public Law 100-242 established a new section 1306(c) to the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968. This provision authorizes advance payments under a valid insurance contract for relocation or demolition of erosion-threatened structures. During consideration of this amendment, the Federal Emergency Management Agency [FEMA] expressed concerns that it would result in a wholesale raid of the national flood insurance fund and that it would be technically complicated to administer. In recognition of these concerns, we agreed to the inclusion of a sunset provision as a "safety valve."

During the intervening 18 months, none of the doomsday predictions have proven true. There has been no raid on the flood insurance fund. In fact, only slightly more than 100 claims have been filed. The program has not proven overly complex to administer. FEMA has published guidelines which are generally well received, and the program is progressing. Certainly there have been difficulties and disagreements, but generally good progress is being made, and threatened structures are being safely removed.

The safety valve has done its job. The worst fears have been calmed. It is clear that we can move now to the next step in implementing this provision, and that is why I and Congressman UPTON have proposed to extend the authorization for this program for an additional 3 years. This additional period will allow complete study and documentation of the benefits of this program, after which the Congress may consider making this a permanent feature of the National Flood Insurance Program.

This bill also makes two modest technical amendments. First, the exemption for the Dune Road community on Long Island, NY, is extended slightly to capture all households in that area. This is necessary because the language of Public Law 100-242 was simply not adequately inclusive and this omission was not discovered until after enactment.

Second, an interpretational disagreement is resolved. The word "claim" is deleted from section 1306(c)(1) and replaced with the word "certification." This clarifies that the process of certification by a State or local authority—and approval of that certification by FEMA—serves to trigger this provision. Once certified as subject to imminent collapse—including final determination by FEMA that the certification has been conducted in compliance with program guidelines—a structure must be relocated or demolished, and payment must be provided as proscribed in section 1306(c)(1).

Undoubtedly, other changes will be proposed to improve this provision. While they have not been included for purposes of introduction, I am committed to their full consideration.

This provision enjoyed strong support when originally considered during the 100th Congress. Subsequent to enactment, it has passed the acid test. It deserves extension.

Clearly, erosion is the root-cause of many flood-related damages. Since the Federal Government, through the Flood Insurance Program, is the principal insurer of high hazard coastal structures, shoreline erosion is insidiously increasing the financial exposure of the taxpayer. This provision promises to reverse that trend, and thereby avoid costly damages to coastal property.

Not only does the provision make good financial sense, it makes good common sense. If section 1306 is not extended, property owners across the Nation will again be put in a very difficult position. As erosion brings the water ever closer to their home or business, they will be faced with a catch-22 situation. Even though the structure is doomed to collapse, they will not be able to receive any insurance payment until the damage actually occurs. They will be forced to sit helplessly by and await the inevitable. They could, of course, relocate the structure, but they would have to pay out of their own pocket. It doesn't take a mathematics scholar to figure out what the vast majority will do. They will let the structure fall and collect insurance for a total loss.

If extended, section 1306(c) will allow an advance payment for the structure to be moved in an orderly and timely fashion. The homeowner will not be required to wait helplessly for the structure to collapse. The home will not be a health or safety hazard. The beaches will not be littered with debris. Local governments will not be burdened with the costs of cleanup.

In return for advance coverage, the owner will be required to meet minimal requirements for redevelopment or relocation. These requirements, referred to as "erosion setbacks," are designed to provide a margin of safety and will help prevent repetitive damages. Because relocation is cheaper than total loss, and because repetitive damages will be avoided through implementation of erosion setbacks, Federal flood insurance costs should be reduced over the long term.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, this provision makes good sense. It is an important first step in coming to grips with this difficult national problem. It makes the flood insurance program more responsive. I ask my colleagues to support its extension for at least another 3 years.

THE NOTCH BABY ACT OF 1989

HON. FRED GRANDY

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. GRANDY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer legislation with the goal of providing a fair and equitable solution to the Social Security "notch." Some 7 million Americans born in the years 1917-21 are disenchanted with the Social Security System because they receive smaller retirement benefits than they are entitled to, compared to other Social Security recipients.

Undoubtedly, no single issue has "dogged the footsteps" of more Members of Congress than the concerns of those born in the notch—1917-21. Due to the emotional nature of the notch question, few issues have been shrouded in more misinformation and misunderstanding. For this reason, I am reintroducing the legislation authored by our former colleague from Nebraska, Hal Daub, in the 100th Congress as H.R. 1721. While many notch organizations have advocated, and others have promised, more generous resolutions of the notch issue, I am firmly convinced that our seniors deserve better—a straightforward, realistic resolution to their concerns. This legislation is just such a solution.

Last summer, the General Accounting Office released the long-awaited study of the notch. The study outlined three points to consider when addressing the notch issue:

First, the financing of notch legislation should be as neutral as possible in its effect on the Social Security trust fund;

Second, the feasibility of actual implementation of such legislation should be given consideration; and Third, the transition period should not be lengthened.

I am confident that the Notch Baby Act of 1989 fulfills all three of these criteria.

While the $24.3 billion cost of this bill over 10 years is sizable, it represents the lowest cost alternative to resolving the notch. Therefore, it would have the smallest effect on the solvency of the OASDI trust fund, and upon the withholdings of current workers. Although there is no official definition of an adequate contingency level for the trust funds, a trust fund ratio of 100 percent—or 1 year's reserve—is generally considered to be adequate. At present, the trust fund ratio is expected to reach that 100 percent ratio goal at the end of 1992. With the enactment of this legislation, the trust fund ratio would be 95 percent at the end of 1992 and would reach the 100 percent ratio in mid-1993. The lower comparable cost of this bill, and the minimal affect it would have on the solvency of the trust fund makes this legislation the most realistic resolution to the notch.

The Notch Baby Act of 1989 will allow Social Security beneficiaries born in the years 1917-21 to become eligible for a new, alternative computation method. This method would affect benefits for the months after December 1989.

At this time I would like to read a paragraph from last year's GAO report of the notch:

> No amount of technical discussion and sophisticated analysis is sufficient to convince an individual that it is equitable for him to receive a benefit that is $100 less per month than his nearly identical neighbor. In our view, with the benefit of at least 9 years' hindsight it appears that it might have been better to have allowed the inclusion of post-age 61 earnings in the transitional guarantee computation. Data from SSA show that this would have permitted a smoother phase-out for later age retirees. While such a provision might not have prevented "notches" entirely, it would have alleviated a portion of the problem.

This statement is important because a key factor in my legislation is that post-age 61 earnings are taken into consideration under my new formula. The transition formula under the Notch Baby Act of 1989 is based upon the new law formula plus a declining percentage of the difference between the benefit computed under the old law—including 3 years of post-age 61 earnings—and the benefit under the new law.

The following graph from the GAO report illustrates how the blended formula would work for the "notch babies":

	Guaranteed a PIA of no less than (percent)
Worker reaching age 62 in:
1979	New law PIA + 60 [1]
1980	New law PIA + 35 [1]
1981	New law PIA + 30 [1]
1982	New law PIA + 25 [1]
1983	New law PIA + 10 [1]

[1] Modified old law PIA–AIME PIA.

This formula allows for the phase-in of the new benefit compulation law created by the 1977 Social Security Amendments. The formula is fair and more closely follows congressional intent relative to the 1977 law. This legislation specifically addresses the discontent associated with the old transition formula by allowing the "notch babies" to calculate earnings after age 61 on par with those born before 1917 and provides a percentage of the difference between old law and new law formulas.

Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that this proposal is a fair and responsible approach to the notch inequities. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

INTRODUCTION OF THE MERCHANT MARINERS FAIRNESS AND MEMORIAL ACT OF 1989

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to introduce the Merchant Mariners Fairness and Memorial Act of 1989.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this legislation is twofold. First, it will correct a major injustice that has been perpetrated on thousands of Americans who proudly served in our U.S. merchant marine during World War II.

And, second, it will authorize the Secretary of Transportation to transfer the title of an obsolete vessel from the National Defense Reserve Fleet to a nonprofit group involved in a merchant marine memorial project.

Let me describe why it is essential that Congress enact this legislation.

While it is now 44 years since the end of World War II, there are still many Americans who served in the U.S Maritime Service who have not received any recognition or benefits for the vital role they played in that conflict.

Unlike their brothers in uniform, America's merchant seamen came home to no ticker-tape parades. They came home to no celebration. In fact, little, if anything, was said about the contributions they made to defeating the Axis powers, keeping Europe and Asia free, and preserving our freedom here in the United States. Worst, these merchant seamen came home to none of the benefits enjoyed by the men and women who served America in uniform.

Mr. Speaker, we know that 270,000 merchant seamen helped deliver troops and war material to every Allied invasion site from Guadalcanal to Omaha Beach. They also tranported our troops back home to the United States and, when that task was completed, they carried food and medicine to millions of the world's starving people. The price they paid to keep us free was high: 733 U.S. merchant ships were destroyed; 6,632 seamen were killed, and 609 merchant mariners were taken as prisoners of war. Indeed, their casualty rate was only one-tenth of 1 percent lower than our Marine Corps, which experienced the highest casualty rate of any branch of the military services.

President Franklin Roosevelt noted that our merchant mariners were men who "returned to their jobs at sea again and again, because they realized that the lifelines to our battlefront would be broken if they did not carry out their vital part in this global war."

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, commenting after the Normandy invasion in 1944, said that "when final victory is ours, there is no organization that will share its credit more deservedly than the merchant marine."

Gen. Douglas MacArthur emphatically stated that "they have contributed tremendously to our success. I hold no branch in higher esteem than the merchant marine service."

Finally, Adm. Chester Nimitz said that "without these merchant ships wholly devoted to winning the war, our substantial progress would not have been possible."

Mr. Speaker, despite these well-deserved accolades and expressions of recognition, unfortunately, our merchant seamen became the forgotten patriots of World War II.

While there have been attempts over the past 40 years to legislatively provide veterans status to these merchant seamen, each of those efforts failed.

A prominent advocate of such legislation was Congressman Thomas Joseph Lane of Massachusetts. In fact, on October 8, 1945, Congressman Lane made one of the most eloquent statements on behalf of our World War II merchant mariners. In that speech, Congressman Lane noted that "men of the merchant marine were the first to fight and the first to die. They, above all others, saved England when she stood alone against Nazi aggression and was but a few weeks away from the starvation which meant certain defeat. In those dark days the merchant marine was our last and only hope."

"Theirs was a constant, nerve-wracking vigil against enemy ambush that was frequent, swift, and deadly. Many ships went down with many men. But the lines never faltered. Their war service, constantly exposed to enemy action, was indispensable to victory."

Mr. Speaker, Congressman Lane was absolutely correct in his assessment. These men paid a tremendous price in fighting for us, but have been forgotten by us.

It is also significant to remember that in October 1941, President Roosevelt asked the Congress to enact legislation to lift the ban on arming merchant ships. Less than 1 month later, Congress approved such legislation.

In addition, President Roosevelt issued an Executive order establishing the War Shipping Administration [WSA] on February 7, 1942, as a civilian Federal agency within the Executive Office of the President. By that order, all of the functions, duties and powers conferred upon the U.S. Maritime Commission with respect to the operation and requisition of vessels were transferred to the WSA. In short, almost all of our merchant seamen became employees of the United States.

With that background, we move forward to October 2, 1987, a day which will long be remembered by all World War II merchant seamen. On that day, U.S. District Court Judge Louis S. Oberdorfer declared that the Pentagon's previous decisions to reject veterans status for World War II merchant seamen were "arbitrary and capricious and * * * not supported by substantial evidence."

As a result of this landmark court decision, Secretary of the Air Force Edward C. Aldridge, Jr., issued a statement on January 19, 1988, which stipulated that service of the "American Merchant Marine and oceangoing service during the period of armed conflict, December 7, 1941, to August 15, 1945" should be considered "active duty" for purposes of all laws administered by the Veterans' Administration.

While I am pleased that we have finally made the right decision in granting veterans status to some of these forgotten partriots, I believe the Secretary's decision is badly flawed and must be corrected in one critical respect.

By establishing the so-called period of armed conflict, the Secretary again has made an arbitrary and capricious decision which has no basis in law. In fact, the term "period of armed conflict" doesn't even appear in Judge Oberdorfer's 34-page decision.

By selecting these days, Secretary Aldridge has unfairly penalized thousands of Americans who served in our Nation's U.S. maritime service with distinction during 1945 and 1946.

Based on discussions with the U.S. Coast Guard, which is currently processing applications for veterans status, there are three categories of merchant mariners who are adversely affected by Secretary Aldridge's decision. These include: Those who served in the U.S. merchant marine before August 15, 1945, but did not have any oceangoing voyages prior to that date; those merchant seamen who were in military training on August 15, 1945; and those who were inducted into the U.S. maritime service after August 15, 1945.

It is my understanding that at least 2,000 merchant seamen in the first two categories have already filed applications for veterans status with the Coast Guard.

Consider for a moment Mr. Charles Richard Page, a Houstonian who was in the U.S. maritime service from August 21, 1945, to May 6, 1947. While Mr. Page enlisted in our merchant marine on July 5, 1945, certain bureaucratic delays, over which he had no control, prevented his actual induction by about 5 weeks. Following his induction, he successfully completed his military training at Catalina Island, off the coast of California, and he served with great distinction.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly disagree with those who argue that these individuals are not entitled to veterans' status. Let me tell you why all merchant mariners who served between December 7, 1941, and December 31, 1946, should be granted veterans' status.

Once again using Mr. Page as an example, while it is true he was on "active service" after August 15, 1945, the Japanese did not formally surrender to the United States and its allies until September 2, 1945.

Mr. Page and the other hundreds of merchant mariners who completed training in 1945 and 1946 at places like Kings Point, St. Petersburg, and Catalina Island served on ships under the direct military control of the U.S. Navy. These merchant marines traveled under sealed orders and their vessels were equipped with an array of military equipment, including 50-caliber guns.

In addition, the War Shipping Administration was in control of all ship movements and merchant mariners until December 31, 1946. In fact, early in the war, the Director of the Selective Service, Gen. Lewis Hershey, had instructed all draft boards throughout the country that "service in the merchant marine * * * is so closely allied to service in the Armed Forces that men found by the local board to be actively engaged at sea may well be considered as engaged in active defense of the country. Such service may properly be considered as tantamount to military service."

Mr. Speaker, those ships were not taking pleasure cruises. They were transporting desperately needed supplies, including medicine, to countries that had been devastated by war. The ships and their crews traveled through heavily mined waters, like the Mediterranean Sea, and on more than one occasion merchant ships were sunk by mines.

In fact, there were at least 11 U.S. merchant vessels damaged or lost after August 15, 1945. One of those was the SS Jesse Billingsley, which was hit by a mine off the coast of Trieste, Yugoslavia, on November 19, 1946. One U.S. merchant mariner lost his life in that explosion.

Not until December 31, 1946, did President Harry Truman state during a press conference that he was issuing Proclamation 2714 which read in part that "although a state of war still exists, it is at this time possible to declare, and I find it to be in the public interests to declare, that hostilities have terminated."

Mr. Speaker, all other laws that affect World War II veterans use the date December 31, 1946. Quoting from the Veterans' Administration manual, "Chapter IV—Veterans Benefits. War Period. World War II comprises the period from December 7, 1941, to December 31, 1946." In addition, it is important to note that a person could have been inducted into the U.S. Army during the week prior to August 15, 1945, and would be rightly considered a World War II veteran. Why don't all of our World War II merchant mariners receive the same consideration?

Mr. Speaker, the August 15, 1945, date simply has no basis in law. In fact, the overwhelming preponderance of evidence suggests that the correct and only relevant date is December 31, 1946. After all, that is the date of Proclamation 2714, and that is the date used for all other World War II veterans laws. While I don't question the motives of the Secretary of the Air Force for choosing this so-called period of armed conflict, justice demands that Congress finish the job which Secretary Aldridge began. That is the key purpose of my legislation: To extend veterans status to all merchant mariners who served our country's war effort between December 7, 1941, and December 31, 1946.

While it is true that our merchant seamen received letters, ribbons, and other citations for their outstanding service, they are entitled to more than just these tokens of service. They deserve not only our respect, but they deserve to be treated in exactly the same manner as all other World War II veterans.

The second purpose of this important legislation is to give the Secretary of Transportation the authority to provide obsolete vessels to certain nonprofit organizations interested in establishing merchant marine memorials.

While there are many memorials for those who sacrificed their lives in the Armed Forces of this Nation, there are precious few dedicated to those merchant mariners killed during our Nation's conflicts.

As I have already demonstrated, it is clear that the outcome of World War II would have been dramatically different, if the U.S. merchant marine had not done its job with such courage, determination and bravery.

This provision will, in a small way, say to the families of those merchant mariners who lost their lives that their sacrifice was not in vain and that this Nation still honors their gallant efforts.

Under the terms of this provision, to qualify for an obsolete vessel, an organization would be required to raise at least $100,000 in private funds prior to the enactment of this bill.

There are no Federal funds authorized and additional fiscal safeguards have been built into the act. For instance, an obsolete vessel would have to be delivered to the recipient at its current location, in its present condition and without cost to the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, these types of merchant marine memorials are long overdue. I would also like to compliment our highly distinguished colleague from Maryland, Congresswoman HELEN BENTLEY, for her tireless dedication to this idea and to the well-being of all our merchant seamen.

Mr. Speaker, now is the time to enact the Merchant Mariners Fairness and Memorial Act of 1989.

INTRODUCTION OF THE BILL TO REPEAL THE MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE ACT OF 1989

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, since its passage, I haven't heard 1 of the 72 Members who voted against the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act express regret over their vote, but I've heard complaints from many of those who are sorry they voted for it.

Lately, we've been reading more financial reports advising senior citizens on how to adjust their incomes in 1989 to reduce their tax liabilities. They are coming up with clever strategies to avoid paying the new surtax on their income tax that was imposed on them to pay for a Catastrophic Coverage Act they didn't want. But, this is one New Year's gift from Congress which taxpaying seniors find unwelcome.

In reducing tax liabilities to avoid the surtax, taxpaying seniors will withdraw moneys available for benefits. I'd like to ask my colleagues if they know that the Catastrophic Coverage Act contains a provision requiring that "The Secretary would increase the flat premium to replace revenue" in the case of a revenue shortfall. I fear this might result in not only higher Medicare part B payments, but also higher deductibles, lower levels of service and fewer people covered.

The funding mechanism is self-defeating.

And, there are other perverse effects.

At a time when, in many areas of the country, seniors are being asked to reenter the work force, the Medicare Catastrophic Act is a disincentive to work. If seniors make more money and thus pay more income taxes, they will be forced to pay this surcharge on their taxes, That reduces the incentive to work—and the incentive to save, as well.

The Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 might better be called the "Seniors' Anti-supply Side Economics Act of 1988."

At a time when society is craving greater savings and investment by seniors to cover retirement expenses, the Medicare Catastrophic Act is a mistake. Its a raw deal for seniors who have saved and invested wisely for their later years. Not only will they have to pay income taxes, but also new surcharges on those taxes for a bill that doesn't even encompass long-term care.

My constituents are writing and calling my office to protest the surtax and the sharp increases in Medicare part B. I understand that's happening in other congressional districts, too.

The financing mechanisms in the bill are onerous for our tax-paying senior citizens, given the inevitable reduction of taxable income and assets, they sow the seeds of their own failure.

For these reasons, I am introducing a bill to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Act of 1988 and to establish a bipartisan advisory group to study and develop proposals to provide protection against excessive costs of catastrophic illness beyond the scope of current Medicare coverage.

This advisory group would:

Study the needs of Medicare beneficiaries for extended acute illness care beyond what Medicare already provides;

Study the differences in acute care experiences of Medicare beneficiaries who have supplemental insurance or comparable coverage—such as retirement health benefits—compared to those without such coverage;

Study how Medicare benefits may be complimented by Government-backed private supplemental insurance or comparable coverage to protect low income persons not covered by Medicaid, from excessive acute medical care expenses;

Study the relative needs of retirees for extended acute care versus long-term homecare and nursing home insurance for nonacute care situations;

Evaluate short and long-term costs and funding mechanisms of such studies and proposals for providing protection against excessive costs of catastrophic illness beyond the scope of current Medicare coverage; and

Finally, this advisory group would develop proposals to make available extended acute care insurance protection taking into consideration and not eliminating existing coverage, supplemental insurance and comparable coverage.

If you too have been faced with senior's complaints, I urge you to cosponsor this legislation. If you have questions or would like to cosponsor this bill, please contact my office.

ELECTION REFORM

HON. AL SWIFT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Speaker, the 1988 election campaign was very distressing in many respects. When only 50 percent of the eligible voters bother to go to the polls, when millions of dollars in nonreported funds are loosely spread about the political scene, when the cost of running for the House now exceeds what it cost only a few years ago to run for the Senate, and when a sizable portion of the electorate feels cheated out of its vote, clearly a need for improvement has been demonstrated, and the demand for change and prompt congressional action becomes overwhelming.

Today, we are introducing a major package of reform bills designed to correct many of the abuses that have entered our present election process. Other colleagues will be joining me in introducing additional legislation aimed at the abuses and gaps in present election law, so we will have today a block of bills, sequentially numbered, focused on improving our election process. You, Mr. Speaker, and the chairman of the House Committee on Administration, FRANK ANNUNZIO, have indicated that this issue is a priority for the 101st Congress, and as chairman of the Subcommittee on Elections, I plan to take immediate action on the proposed legislation. It is my understanding that the Senate also plans to move ahead rapidly in this area. With determination and good will, we can put in place better laws to govern and direct our elections, which, after all, are the basic building blocks of our democracy.

The first bill, introduced by Chairman ANNUNZIO, is the Soft Money Control Act. Although Congress approved public funding for Presidential elections in a deliberate effort to get away from the corrupting influence of huge individual, corporate, and other organization contributions, the money raisers in 1988 found various ways to reap in millions of so-called soft dollars to be used in the Presidential campaign. This practice violates the intent of Congress, and the chairman's Soft Money Control Act will close the loophole through which these funds have found their way into the Presidential election process. By doing so, this bill will restore the integrity of the Presidential campaign funding system, a system which has served the country extraordinarily well since its inception.

The second bill, which Chairman ANNUNZIO and I are introducing along with 15 other original cosponsors, is the Campaign Cost Reduction and Reform Act. This measure is identical to legislation I introduced in the last Congress and offers an innovative and comprehensive approach to reducing the cost of campaigns, thus reducing the need to raise huge amounts of money. The cost of congressional election campaigns is out of control. Not only are challengers placed in an almost impossible financial situation, but incumbents are forced to spend an enormous amount of time raising money instead of doing their jobs. The possibility for corruption and undue influence accelerates with the rising cost of campaigning. This legislation offers specific incentives to candidates to limit their expenditures in return for substantial reductions in campaign costs. Again, I believe that this is the most pragmatic and cost-efficient approach to a serious problem which no longer can simply be debated. I know this is a very emotional and controversial issue. My subcommittee has held numerous public hearings on the subject and I have been working for several years to develop a consensus within the Congress. Everyone recognizes the problem and almost everyone has his own solution. The Campaign Cost Reduction and Reform Act offers a compromise as well as a major step forward in reforming the process. Other approaches will be introduced and will receive full consideration from my subcommittee.

I have also introduced today, along with Chairman ANNUNZIO, the National Voter Registration Act. A postelection New York Times/CBS News poll indicated that nearly 40 percent of those who did not vote would have if they had been registered. Improving the registration process is the most important legislative action we can take to increase voter turnout. The bill provides that an eligible citizen will automatically be registered to vote when he or she applies for or renews a driver's license, unless the individual specifically declines. National statistics indicate that 87 percent of the eligible voters in the United States hold drivers' licenses and perhaps another 2 or 3 percent hold identification cards which have been issued at the driver's license office. Thus, the National Voter Registration Act, when fully implemented by the States, will reach 90 percent of the eligible public. To reach the remaining 10 percent, my bill calls for mail registration procedures and agency registration. The legislation also adjusts the purging process to make it less burdensome for the occasional voter. This measure improves the registration process while extremely limiting the opportunity for fraud. It is the product of extensive hearings and consultations with election officials and voting rights activists conducted by my subcommittee last year. I believe it is a pragmatic, cost-efficient, and politically sound approach to a serious problem for our democracy. Other bills, including legislation providing for election day registration, will be introduced and will receive full consideration.

I am reintroducing today my uniform poll closing bill, legislation which has already twice passed the House. Chairman ANNUNZIO, together with the ranking member on my subcommittee, BILL THOMAS, have joined me in cosponsoring this measure. The uniform poll closing bill, along with the network agreement not to project an election winner until the polls have closed in a specific State, will ensure that all the eligible voters in the continental United States have a fair and equitable opportunity to make their choices before the networks proclaim a winner. While the networks, following their policy, were still able to project the election at 9:20 p.m. eastern standard time because the polls in States with a sufficient number of electoral votes had closed by that hour, millions of voters were left frustrated and feeling disenfranchised since their polls had not yet closed. Enactment of the uniform poll closing bill, in conjunction with the network agreement, would put an end to this early projection problem since all the polls in the continental United States would close at exactly the same hour, thus negating the opportunity for an early projection.

Additional bills which are being introduced as part of this reform package will address such issues as money bundling and tax credits for political contributions. I anticipate other measures on this same general subject will be offered by Members on both sides of the aisle, and I assure my colleagues that the Subcommittee on Elections will consider all such proposals with great care. Because this is an inherently controversial area, it will be extremely difficult to pass meaningful reform without fair and equitable compromises.

I will be circulating more detailed information on these bills over the next several weeks, and I welcome cosponsors along with any suggestions or recommendations. You, Mr. Speaker, and Chairman ANNUNZIO have given me the "full steam ahead" signal on this legislation, and, as soon as the committees are officially organized, my Subcommittee on Elections will get cracking.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO EXEMPT CERTAIN TAXPAYERS FROM IRS USER FEES

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today to exempt certain taxpayers from the Internal Revenue Service User Fee Program enacted as part of the 1987 budget reconciliation legislation. My legislation restores some fairness to retired senior citizens who have been penalized by the new User Fee Program.

Mr. Speaker, the 1987 reconciliation legislation authorized the Internal Revenue Service to establish a User Fee Program. The bill envisioned that the IRS would set up a series of fees for certain services which the agency had previously been providing for free. For example, if a taxpayer now requests a private letter ruling, the IRS will generally charge that taxpayer at least $200. The legislation did give the IRS some discretionary authority to reduce or waive the fees in certain instances, however.

One year before enactment of the 1987 legislation, in the 1986 Tax Reform Act, Congress agreed to repeal the so-called 3-year recovery rule, under which taxpayers who contributed to their own pension were entitled to recover their own contributions tax free so long as they recovered their total contributions within 3 years. After the employees' contributions were recovered, the pension was fully taxable.

The 1986 act replaced this simplified scheme with a far more complicated method of annuity taxation. In general, a taxpayer who contributes to his own pension must calculate his "exclusion ration" to determine the portion of his pension that is subject to tax. The formula used for calculating the exclusion ratio is extremely complicated, and requires taxpayers to use annuity tables published by the Internal Revenue Service.

It has recently come to my attention that the IRS has used the generic authority contained in the 1987 legislation to impose user fees to charge taxpayers who need to calculate their exclusion ratio. Mr. Speaker, this is adding insult to injury. I opposed the repeal of the 3-year recovery rule. I hope that Congress will someday overturn that mistaken decision.

But to add to the unfairness of repealing the 3-year recovery rule a fee to calculate a tax liability legally due the Government is an outrage. To its credit, the IRS has reduced the fees it could have charged, and is only charging $50.

Still, there is an element of unfairness in the IRS asking taxpayers to use an extremely complicated formula and risk making a costly error or else charging retired employees on a fixed pension $50 to make this calculation for them. Therefore, I have introduced legislation prohibiting the IRS from charging any fee for calculating a taxpayer's exclusion ratio. My bill also clarifies that any fees paid by taxpayers during the last tax season will be deductible. The provisions apply to requests made after January 3, 1989.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is only fair. Many of us have heard from our constituents with complaints over the complexity of income tax forms, and the $50 fee is merely more complexity and more unfairness in their minds. This legislation deserves strong support, and I will be urging my colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee to move expeditiously on it in the coming months.

ENTERPRISE ZONE LEGISLATION

HON. ANDY IRELAND

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, our former colleague, Jack Kemp, who has been nominated to be Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, worked diligently during his years in Congress to pass legislation to establish enterprise zones. As Secretary, I know he will want to pursue this most worthy goal.

To ensure that the development of enterprise zones remains a priority for Members of Congress in the 101st, I am reintroducing this proposal today. I think the time has come to pass this needed legislation and look forward to working with my colleagues and the Secretary-designate, Jack Kemp, on this most important issue.

THE PEACEFUL ATOM ACT

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, today, on the first day of the One Hundred First Congress, I am introducing the Peaceful Atom Act, a bill to bar conversion of civilian nuclear reactors to military use. Joining me are my colleagues from Oregon, Mr. DEFAZIO and Mr. AUCOIN.

Since the beginning of our development of peaceful atomic energy, we have kept a wall between military and civilian uses of this power. That wall lets the whole world join us in enjoying the benefits of peaceful power, while discouraging the spread of nuclear weapons.

I'm sorry to say that wall is in danger. President Reagan has ordered the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to draw up plans for Federal take-over of civilian plants in a defense emergency. And our Department of Energy [DOE] wants to develop the technology to turn a reactor designed for civilian use into a producer of bomb fuels. It has its eyes on a half-built Washington Public Power Supply System [WPPSS] plant in the Pacific Northwest.

The idea of converting the WPPSS reactor sends a special chill down the backs of Oregonians. From the Northwest electric ratepayers' point of view, converting WPPSS makes about as much sense as shaking a hornet's nest. It is sure to trigger new law suits from WPPSS bondholders. At worst, it could send the Bonneville Power Administration scrambling to pay off the multibillion dollar WPPSS-1 debt with nowhere to turn but the taxpayers. The effect on the region's economy is almost too awful to think about.

And there are more environmental wrinkles involved than you can count. There is pollution from tritium reprocessing, pollution that has contaminated DOE's Savannah River Plant with toxic mercury and given it rain that isn't safe to drink. There are questions about the plant's impact on fish and wildlife along the Columbia River and all along the Northwest power grid. There are concerns, valid ones, in every town along Interstate 84 in eastern Oregon, about shipping radioactive fuel, wastes, and bomb materials through those canyons and mountains.

There are unanswered questions about catastrophic accidents, since the enriched fuel at a defense facility offers dangers civilian plants don't have to be designed for, dangers like a "recriticality" if the fuel melts. There are emerging safety concerns, like the plant's ability to withstand earthquakes we didn't think were possible when the plant was designed. And I have to wonder why, if WPPSS conversion is such a good idea, DOE is afraid to turn the plans over to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission for their environmental and safety approval in a licensing proceeding.

But the biggest issue of all, for all Americans, is nuclear nonproliferation. Plans for WPPSS conversion and reactor takeovers are sending a terrible message to the many countries that have nuclear plants but do not have the bomb: nuclear weapons are just within your grasp.

We can't expect other countries to resist the temptation to raid their domestic nuclear industry if we give in ourselves.

In 1983, Congress amended the Atomic Energy Act to prohibit scavenging bomb material from American civilian plant wastes. Now we need to reaffirm that action by barring military use of any plant designed for civilian ends.

Through treaties and diplomacy, we have taken great strides in the past few years to lessen the threat of nuclear holocaust from the weapons of the superpowers. But we must not ignore the parallel threat from proliferation of nuclear weapons among other nations. The Peaceful Atom Act, by itself, will not end the threat. But it will tell the world the United States is serious about keeping the nuclear peace.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

THE ALLIES FAIR SHARE DEFENSE ACT OF 1989

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced the Allies Fair Share Defense Act of 1989, a measure to ensure that our NATO allies and Japan contribute a fair share to provide for their own security and defense.

In 1951, Dwight Eisenhower viewed American aid for NATO as essential, but he stated, "If in 10 years, all American troops stationed in Europe for national defense purposes have not been returned to the United States, then this whole project will have failed." Now, more than four decades after the end of World War II, the number of U.S. troops stationed in Europe is 340,243—321,896 on land and 18,347 afloat—nearly 89,000 more than a decade ago. Our allies' forces, in contrast, have barely increased. The United States troop presence in Japan is 48,940—with an additional 22,319 afloat in the East Asian Pacific. All told, 370,836—411,502 including those afloat—members of the U.S. military were stationed outside the United States as of March 31, 1988.

A major U.S. role in the defense of our allies was warranted when, as they emerged from World War II, they were weak economically and fragile politically. The economic and political strength and maturity of our allies now requires that they should take more financial responsibility for their own defense and the worldwide defense of democracy.

We are subsidizing their defense while they are subsidizing their exports. And it's costing us millions of jobs.

Under the protective shield of the United States, European countries, and Japan have been able to modernize their industrial plants, while the United States now has an estimated trade deficit of $152 billion. I believe the time has come to send a clear signal to our allies that we are serious about achieving a better balance of defense expenditures.

Secretary of Defense Carlucci has said that our NATO allies "could and should do more." Rozanne Ridgway, Assistant Secretary of State for European and Canadian Affairs, and George Bader, Principal Deputy for European and NATO policy in the Pentagon's Office of International Security Policy, each insisted during testimony to the defense burdensharing panel that increasing allied contributions to military defense remains high on the diplomatic agenda.

The Senate Appropriations Committee's fiscal year 1988 military construction bill repeatedly emphasized that the deep cuts in projects in Europe and Japan reflected a fundamental demand that the allies pay more and the Pentagon pay less of the total cost of alliance defense.

Recognizing that Italy spends about 2 percent of its gross domestic product [GDP] on defense, Italian Defense Minister Valerio Zanone wants to raise Italian defense spending by $25 billion over the next decade to modernize the Italian Armed Forces. NATO's

Commander of Allied Forces Baltic Approaches, Lt. Gen. Paul Thorsen, resigned from his post and from the Danish Army last year, attacking the "skinflint" Danish politicians and administrators for failing to support NATO and for "continually undermining Danish defense."

A far-reaching report scheduled to be released by the North Atlantic Assembly, a group of influential political leaders from major NATO nations, states, in essence, that Europe must do more for its own defense.

While I am not suggesting that any one of these leaders might support my legislation, it is clear that these concerns deserve attention and response. Accountability must be added to our allies' promises. Our allies must share fairly and fully the risks, burdens, and responsibilities, as well as the benefits of our common efforts.

The United States devotes 6.7 percent of its gross domestic product [GDP] to defense, whereas the member nations of NATO, on the average, spend approximately 3.3 percent of the GDP on defense, and Japanese allocate only slightly more than 1 percent. In fiscal year 1985, a comparison of defense spending and population showed that the United States spent $1,079 per person on defense, NATO allies spent $255 per person, and Japan spent $113 per person.

In 1977, each of the NATO allies pledged to annually increase defense expenditures by 3 percent after inflation. On average, the allies have failed to meet the 3-percent spending objective in each year for the period 1978 to 1985—the total average increase for those years being 2.2 percent. For these same years, U.S. defense spending rose by 5.7 percent per year. Japan during this period raised its defense spending 5.4 percent, but still committed only 1 percent of its GDP to defense.

While I recognize that some NATO allies, such as Greece and Turkey, annually exceed the 3-percent objective and that NATO nations and Japan each donate their land and natural resources and permit foreign troops to live in their countries, and the NATO allies contribute the majority of aircraft, tanks, ships, and troops to the alliance, I would argue that in the post-INF world, our present conventional defense capabilities are dangerously inadequate.

Mr. Speaker, my bill is not designed to terminate America's role in assisting with the defense of NATO nations, Japan, South Korea, or any of our democratic allies worldwide. We will continue to maintain a strong political, economic, and social attachment to our allies. What we want is for our allies to fulfill their repeated promises to the United States with regard to improving their own—and our common—defense capabilities.

My bill is designed to encourage NATO nations and Japan to improve their conventional defense capabilities, because the continued reliance on the early use of nuclear weapons is diametrically opposed to the national security interests of this country and the security interests of our allies. The measure establishes a permanent ceiling on United States forces assigned to permanent duty in NATO countries and Japan and provides for the resolution of United States forces in these countries under certain circumstances.

The "Allies Fair Share Defense Act of 1989" sets a permanent ceiling of 326,414 personnel of the Armed Forces of the United States assigned to permanent duty ashore in member nations of NATO and 65,000 personnel assigned to Japan. Beginning in 1992, and continuing for 3 years, the troop ceiling would be reduced by 30,000 per year for our NATO allies and 7,000 per year for Japan, unless, during the previous fiscal year, each of these countries has increased its defense spending by its real economic growth plus 1 percent.

For example, if West Germany were to realize real economic growth of 1.5 percent in 1990, the following year the government in Bonn would be required to budget an increase of at least 2.5 percent for West German defense spending in 1991. In contrast to the 1977 NATO pledge to increase annual defense expenditures by 3 percent above inflation, which the NATO nations have consistently failed to do, this approach would take into account the direct relationship between economic performance and the relative ability of each ally to increase its contribution to the alliance.

In recognition of the fact that military capabilities are also an important indicator of the allies' ability to share the NATO burden, the member nations of NATO may also prevent the troop reductions by meeting three output goals the allies have set for themselves. These goals are not ones I seek to impose on the alliance, but are objectives they have repeatedly pledged to meet in order to increase the sustainability of the conventional deterrent. My bill simply tells our allies to "put your money where you mouth is and meet your commitments."

The first alternative goal for our NATO allies is to reduce by 20 percent the gap between conventional munitions on hand as of January 1, 1989, and the NATO goal of obtaining and maintaining a 30 days' munitions supply level. An increase of 20 percent is established for each year that this amendment would be in effect, aiming at 100 percent compliance over 5 years. However, the measure applies only to a 3-year period in order to give Congress and our allies a chance to review its effectiveness and the progress being made to comply with its provisions.

The NATO allies have pledged to reach the 30-day munitions supply level in order to be able to sustain their conventional military capability for 30 days. This is all well and good, but the problem is that our allies have yet to develop defense budgets which would enable them to achieve this goal.

The United States has twice the sustainability level of munitions as our allies. What does this mean if the American forces would comprise at most only 25 percent of all the forces in a conventional war scenario? It likely would mean that, when the allies have used all of their ammunition, the conventional war would be over. Then our leaders would have the choice of escalating to nuclear weapons or surrendering. This is not a choice any of us would like to face. The allies must reach the 30-day munitions goal.

The second goal is equally important: to reduce by 20 percent the gap between the number of existing emergency operating facilities and semihardened aircraft shelters available in Europe on January 1, 1989, and the number required to support the United States commitment of reinforcing tactical aircraft. This requires the allies to fulfill their commitment to provide the facilities essential to accommodate the refueling, maintenance, and protection of our rapid reinforcement aircraft whenever they might need to land in Europe.

If a war were to begin in Europe tomorrow, many of America's finest pilots and state-of-the-art aircraft would arrive in Europe only to become sitting ducks—without shelter, without refueling capability, without a way to maintain their aircraft—because our allies have failed to do what they have promised again and again to do. It's time to require our allies to build the facilities necessary for our emergency air support.

The third goal would be certification, made by the Supreme Allied Commander in Europe [SACEUR] to the Secretary of Defense, that the allies have significantly decreased the nuclear threat by increasing their conventional defense capabilities.

These three sustainability objectives give our NATO allies alternative methods to avoid troop reductions. If the NATO allies meet the first real economic growth plus 1 percent objective, there would be no troop withdrawal. If they meet all three of the second path's objectives, there would be no troop reduction. If they meet two of the second path's three objectives, the cut would be 10,000; if they meet only one, the cut would be 20,000.

Japan is also afforded an opportunity to meet a second goal in order to avoid troop reductions. Japan has consistently promised to increase the defense of its sealanes to 1,000 miles. My bill simply requires Japan to follow through on the commitment in increments of one-third between 1990 and 1992 as an alternative way of avoiding the proposed annual troop reduction of 7,000 personnel.

I am not suggesting that Japan be encouraged to launch an offensive military buildup, a prospect that is greatly feared by its neighbors. I am merely suggesting that Japan obtain a defensive goal that it has set for itself: defense of its sealanes to 1,000 miles.

I do commend our NATO allies for the progress they have made in working to develop concrete programs to redress the deficiencies in NATO's defense posture. I also note Japan's break with its policy of artificially holding defense spending to 1 percent or less of its GDP and am optimistic about Japan's $100 billion 5-year military spending plan that seeks to expand its sealane and air defense capabilities. And I encourage Japan to continue to increase its economic assistance to developing countries.

However, much of our allies' progress is still largely in promises and not in programs, and many past promises have never yielded achievements. I think that my bill is necessary to encourage our NATO and Japanese allies to convert words into deeds.

It is important to recognize that the legislation gives our allies adequate time to meet the goals. The first measuring year is 1990, and the first troop withdrawals, in the event of failure by our allies to meet the proposed goals, would not occur until December 1991—3½ years from now.

The possibility of troop reduction is not a threat or punishment. The fact is that if our allies will not pay their fair shares of their own defense, the American taxpayers should not be expected to pay billions of dollars for troops, ammunition, and equipment on their behalf. It would be much less expensive to resort to an undesirable nuclear tripwire and stop paying for a conventional deterrent in Europe and Japan. But I do not think that is what we or our allies want. It is certainly not what I would prefer.

It is time for our allies to fulfill their repeated commitments. That is all my bill requires—that our allies live up to their promises, pay their fair share of defense, and relieve the American taxpayer of an excessive and unwarranted burden.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Allies Fair Share Defense Act of 1989."

SEC. 2. STATEMENT OF FINDINGS AND POLICY.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the member nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (hereinafter in this Act referred to as "NATO") and Japan should each bear a greater share of the cost of their own defense by improving their conventional defense capabilities so as to lengthen the period during which they can be adequately defended by conventional forces in the event of a nonnuclear attack on any NATO member nation or Japan without the necessity of resorting to the early use of nuclear weapons; and

(2) increased defense spending by Japan and NATO member nations and improving conventional sustainability and providing support facilities in NATO member nations for rapid reinforcements from the United States are crucial to accomplishing such a defense capability.

SEC. 3. PROGRAM FOR IMPROVING DEFENSE POSTURE.

(a) PERMANENT CEILING ON OVERSEAS ARMED FORCES.—After September 30, 1990, funds appropriated pursuant to an authorization contained in this or any subsequent Act may not be used to support an end strength level of personnel of the Armed Forces of the United States assigned to permanent duty ashore—

(1) in member nations of NATO (other than the United States) at any level in excess of 326,414; or

(2) in Japan at any level in excess of 65,000.

(b) REDUCTION OF CEILING UNLESS CERTAIN OBJECTIVES ACCOMPLISHED.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—For 1992, 1993, and 1994, the ceilings imposed by subsection (a) shall be reduced by 30,000 for NATO member nations and 7,000 for Japan effective on December 31 of each such calendar year.

(2) EXCEPTIONS FOR NATO MEMBER NATIONS.—The reduction of the end strength level of personnel of the Armed Forces of the United States assigned to permanent duty ashore in member nations of NATO required under paragraph (1) with respect to any calendar year shall not be implemented if the requirements of either of the following subparagraphs are met during such calendar year:

(A) REAL ECONOMIC GROWTH PLUS ONE PERCENT GROWTH IN DEFENSE SPENDING.—Each member nation of NATO has increased its defense spending during the previous calendar year by an average of at least real total economic growth plus 1 percent real growth.

(B) ALTERNATIVE OBJECTIVES.—The Secretary of Defense certifies to Congress in writing that the member nations of NATO (other than the United States) have accomplished all of the following objectives, by real spending increases and not by reallocating infrastructure funds within existing spending levels, during such calendar year:

(i) INCREASE IN SUPPLY OF AERIAL AND GROUND MUNITIONS.—Those member nations of NATO who have committed forces to the Center Region have placed on firm order, or accepted delivery of, an increase in the supply of aerial and ground munitions so as to reduce, on an average, 20 percent of the gap between the goal, as established in NATO Ministerial Guidance, of 30 days supply and the level of such munitions available in the Center Region of NATO as of January 1, 1990.

(ii) INCREASE IN NUMBER OF EMERGENCY OPERATING FACILITIES AND SEMIHARDENED AIRCRAFT SHELTERS.—Member nations of NATO have increased the number of minimum essential and emergency operating facilities and semihardened aircraft shelters in Western Europe so as to reduce, on an average, 20 percent of the gap between the number of such facilities and shelters available on January 1, 1990, and the number required by NATO Ministerial Guidance to support (under NATO/SHAPE standards) the annual commitment of United States reinforcing tactical aircraft Defense Planning Questionnaire (DPQ) Response of the previous year.

(iii) CERTIFICATION OF SIGNIFICANT IMPROVEMENT IN CONVENTIONAL DEFENSE CAPABILITY.—The Supreme Allied Commander in Europe has certified to the Secretary of Defense in writing that during the previous calendar year the member nations of NATO have undertaken significant measures to improve their conventional defense capability which contribute to lengthening the period of time between an armed attack on any member nation of NATO and the request by the Supreme Allied Commander for the release and use of nuclear weapons.

(3) EXCEPTIONS FOR JAPAN.—The reduction of the end strength level of personnel of the Armed Forces of the United States assigned to permanent duty ashore in Japan required under paragraph (1) with respect to any calendar year shall not be implemented if the requirements of either of the following subparagraphs are met during such calendar year:

(A) REAL ECONOMIC GROWTH PLUS ONE PERCENT GROWTH IN DEFENSE SPENDING.—Japan has increased its defense spending during the previous calendar year by an average of at least real total economic growth plus 1 percent real growth.

(B)(i) INCREASE THE DEFENSE OF SEA-LANES TO 1,000 MILES.—Japan is capable of defending its sea-lanes out of 333⅓ miles by December 31, 1991, to 666⅔ miles by December 31, 1992, and to 1,000 miles by December 31, 1993.

(c) AMOUNT OF REDUCTION RELATED TO NUMBER OF OBJECTIVES ACCOMPLISHED.—(1) If the Secretary of Defense does not certify to the Congress that each member nation of NATO (other than the United States) has met either the objective of subsection (b)(2)(A) or all three objectives of subsection (b)(2)(B) during the previous calendar year, but certifies that at least one of the objectives of subsection (b)(2)(B) has been met, the ceiling prescribed in subsection (b) shall be reduced as follows for member nations of NATO:

(A) REDUCTION IF ONLY 1 OBJECTIVE ACCOMPLISHED.—If the Secretary certifies to the Congress that only one of the three objectives has been met, the ceiling shall be reduced by 20,000.

(B) REDUCTION IF ONLY 2 OBJECTIVES ACCOMPLISHES.—If the Secretary certifies that 2 of the 3 objectives have been met, the ceiling shall be reduced by 10,000.

(2) If the Secretary of Defense does not certify to the Congress that Japan has met either the objective of subsection (b)(3)(A) or the objective of subsection (b)(3)(B) during the previous calendar year, the ceiling prescribed in subsection (b) shall be reduced by 7,000 in each calendar year for which one of the objectives is not met.

(e) REPORTS ON ACCOMPLISHMENT OF OBJECTIVES.—

(1) PROGRESS REPORTS.—Not later than March 1 in each of the calendar years 1990 through 1994, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and of the House of Representatives a report on the status of the following matters as of January 1 of the year in which the report is submitted:

(A) SUPPLY OF AERIAL AND GROUND MUNITIONS.—The number of days of supply of the aerial and ground munitions in hand or on order of the member nations of NATO (other than the United States) which have committed forces to the Center Region.

(B) NUMBER OF EMERGENCY OPERATING FACILITIES AND SEMIHARDENED AIRCRAFT SHELTERS.—The number of emergency operating facilities and semihardened aircraft shelter completed or under construction as they relate to the United States commitment of reinforcing aircraft in the United States Defense Planning Questionnaire (DPQ) Response of the previous year.

(C) OTHER MEASURES TAKEN TO IMPROVE CONVENTIONAL DEFENSE CAPABILITY.—The measures taken by the member nations of NATO to improve their conventional defense capability which contribute to lengthening the period of time between an armed attack on any member nation of NATO and the request by the Supreme Allied Commander for the release and use of nuclear weapons.

(2) BASELINE AND METHODOLOGY.—The first such report shall establish the baseline for measuring the annual performance of member nations of NATO in meeting the objectives established in subpargraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (b)(2) and of Japan in meeting the objectives established in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (b)(3). The second report shall describe, and employ on a trial basis, the methodology to be used to establish such baseline.

(3) CIRCUMVENTION OF REQUIREMENT TO INCREASE REAL DEFENSE SPENDING.—The report required by this subsection shall also include an assessment of whether reductions in any of the following areas was accomplished by real spending increases and not by reallocating infrastructure funds within existing or planned spending levels:

(A) SUPPLY OF AERIAL AND GROUND MUNITIONS.—The gap in aerial and ground munitions (referred to in subsection (b)(2)(C) of this section).

(B) NUMBER OF EMERGENCY OPERATING FACILITIES AND SEMIHARDENED AIRCRAFT SHELTERS.—The gap in minimum essential and emergency operating facilites and semihardened aircraft shelters (referred to in subsection (b)(2)(B) of this section).

SEC. 4. LIMITATIONS.

This Act shall not apply if—

(1) a declaration of war by the United States is in effect,

(2) there is an armed attack on any member country of NATO or Japan, or

(3) the President declares a national state of emergency and immediately informs the Congress of such action and the reasons therefor.

EDUCATION AGENDA

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, this month the 101st Congress convenes in Washington and a new administration takes office. I congratulate GEORGE BUSH on his assumption to the Presidency and welcome his pledge to become an education President.

Mr. BUSH can begin to write a solid record in improving education in this country by working with the Congress on several important bills which will be considered this year. BILL GOODLING and I are introducing today two important measures: an extension of the Carl D. Perkins Vocational Education Act through 1995, and an extension of the expiring child nutrition and WIC programs through 1995. The Committee on Education and Labor will work this year to fashion good bipartisan legislation in these areas.

In vocational education we anticipate having to face three major issues.

First, it is clear that the school reform movement has bypassed vocational education programs. In high schools throughout the country, enrollments in vocational education are rapidly declining. If vocational education is to be part of a secondary school curriculum, it must be improved in quality and tied in much more closely with academic course work.

The second issue we face is that there must be far better coordination between vocational and technical courses offered in high schools and course offered in community colleges. Our country badly needs technicians and other trained personnel. We cannot waste resources by having high schools and community colleges offering differing programs which are not part of a coordinated path toward technical proficiency.

The third issue is equity of access. We have to ensure that equality of opportunity and access for vocational education programs is made available to all our citizenry.

In summary, the current law must be simplified in order to assist in updating the skills of America's work force. Preliminary studies are showing that the numerous requirements in the act are frustrating school personnel and are not being as helpful as they could be in assisting school districts in operating efficient and up-to-date programs.

Several studies are being performed for the Congress on vocational education. We look forward to the results of these studies as we fashion our legislation. We also look forward to receiving ideas from Members both on and off our committee.

The other major bill which Mr. GOODLING and I are introducing, extends the Supplemental Feeding Program for Women, Infants and Children [WIC], the Summer Feeding Program, the Nutrition Education and Training Program, the State Administrative Expenses Program and the Distribution Program. In this area, we hope to concentrate on improving the quality of the nutrition provided in the numerous settings funded by the Federal Government. It is well documented that adequate nutrition is necessary for a child to learn in school. We must not only continue these programs but we must also improve them so that they can function as effectively as possible. In particular, we will be looking at the possibility of updating nutritional standards and improving the training of personnel.

We must also focus on simplifying the administrative structure of these programs while maintaining accountability for the funding. These programs result in 44 percent of all the paperwork imposed on educational institutions by the Federal Government. The Department of Agriculture is also imposing a two-tiered audit system on these programs, which runs the risk of duplication and time consuming compliance efforts. We must find ways to simplify this structure while achieving full accountability.

WIC is one of the most cost-effective programs operated by the Federal Government. President-elect Bush has promised to support the WIC Program. Since WIC now funds less than one-half of the eligible recipients, I hope that he will work with us to expand the benefits to the other half. Its expansion will mean that the Federal Government will have to spend fewer dollars in the future on health care, education, and other social services, thus providing us with a great return on our investment.

The hearing schedule for the consideration of these two bills is as follows:

Child nutrition: February 8, 28—March 2, 23.

Vocational education: March 7, 9, 14, 16, 21.

UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS FOR NONPROFESSIONAL SCHOOL EMPLOYEES BETWEEN SCHOOL TERMS

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing a bill to allow States to extend unemployment benefits to nonprofessional school employees between school terms. The Social Security Amendments of 1983 (Public Law 98-21) required the States to deny unemployment benefits between academic years or terms to nonprofessional school employees if the employees have "reasonable assurance" of returning to work in the next academic year. States were also given the option to extend or deny between term unemployment benefits to workers performing services on behalf of an educational institution or an educational service agency but who are not directly employed by either the institution or agency.

As a result of this new Federal mandate, many thousands of nonprofessional employees of elementary, secondary, and higher educational institutions have lost protection against unemployment between academic years or terms. These nonprofessional school employees—custodians, cafeteria workers, bus drivers, crossing guards, and secretaries—are among the lowest paid group of workers in the Nation. Typically, such workers are paid on an hourly basis, at or near the minimum wage level, during the 9-month school period. Given the very low hourly rate of compensation of these workers, it cannot be reasonably maintained that their wages are intended to cover nonwork periods. The automatic unemployment benefits denial requirement is creating a devastating financial hardship for thousands of nonprofessional school workers who are temporarily out of work through no fault of their own. Many of these workers end up applying for public assistance to make ends meet for their family budgets.

Although these workers are willing to work, often they do not possess the additional vocational skills needed to qualify for other employment. In addition, employers may refuse to hire these workers because they know that they will loose the worker when the next school term begins.

It is not fair to single out nonprofessional public school employees for denial of unemployment benefits. All other major categories of seasonal occupational workers are eligible to apply for unemployment benefits. Unworthy benefit claims will be eliminated by existing eligibility requirements set forth in State laws regarding availability for work and work search efforts.

I believe that this bill is consistent with the basic principles of the Unemployment Compensation Program as established in the 1930's. It will extend to a hardworking class of citizens the protection and security they deserve during temporary periods of unavoidable unemployment. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this bill.

THE VISUALLY IMPAIRED VOTERS ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1988

HON. DEAN A. GALLO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to reintroduce the Visually Impaired Voters Assistance Act of 1988 on behalf of myself and 17 original cosponsors.

In the last Congress the bill received strong support and I am confident that my colleagues will recognize the merits of this important legislation and help expedite its passage in the 101st Congress.

As a result of the strong, positive response in New Jersey to Morris County's pioneering effort to give the visually impaired the opportunity to be full participants in the election process, I am offering this legislation to provide equal voting rights to people across the country.

There are over 11 million people in the United States who suffer from some degree of visual impairment that cannot be corrected with eyeglasses or contact lenses.

This means that 1 person in 19 is visually impaired. Among persons age 65 to 74, that number rises to one person in seven.

With the general aging of the population between now and the year 2000, I am concerned that the lack of enlarged ballots may discourage larger and larger percentages of the population from voting.

My bill will require States to make enlarged print voting aids and ballots available in Federal elections to visually impaired voters and will require the chief election officer in each State to ensure that public notice of this service reaches visually impaired voters.

In addition, the bill requires a comprehensive study by the Federal Election Commission of steps currently being taken by the States to provide access to blind voters, either through braille or audio aids. The FEC will report its findings within 1 year.

Leaders of health and medical organizations who represent the visually impaired, including the National Association for the Visually Handicapped and the American Council of the Blind, are extremely enthusiastic about this bill.

I am grateful for those individuals and organizations who contributed their ideas to this legislation. One thing is clear from their comments—this legislation is long overdue.

With this thought in mind, I once again ask my colleagues to join me and 17 of your fellow Members in support of this legislation and to work for its passage so that all visually impaired persons, including thousands of senior citizens, may be able to fully participate in the next Federal election.

ENVIRONMENTAL ENHANCEMENT OF THE UPPER MISSISSIPPI RIVER SYSTEM

OF WISCONSIN

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, on this first day of the 101st Congress, I would like to take the time of the House to outline one of my legislative priorities for the upcoming session—the environmental enhancement of the upper Mississippi River system.

Since being elected to Congress in 1980, I have been involved in fashioning a multipurpose upper Mississippi River management plan—one that balances navigational and environmental interests. In 1986, legislation which I had introduced was approved as part of the Water Resources Development Act. Section 1103 of Public Law 99-662 is now known as the Upper Mississippi River Management Act of 1986.

With the authorization now complete, my efforts necessarily have turned to ensuring that adequate and balanced funding is available for the program. In the first 2 fiscal years of the program, the Upper Mississippi River System Environmental Management Program [EMP] has been appropriated $12.7 million. Its authorization for these 2 years, however, has been $35.3 million. At this rate, the EMP will be appropriated $69 million over its 10-year life, despite its authorized level of $191.45 million.

When we enacted the Upper Mississippi River Management Act in 1986, Congress intended for the environmental and navigational elements of the program to proceed in parallel fashion. However, while the EMP has been appropriated at 36 percent of its authorized rate, the major navigational element of the program—the second lock at lock and dam 26 in Alton, IL—has proceeded at 88 percent of its construction estimate.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation to extend the amounts authorized for the EMP for an additional 2 years without increasing the total amounts authorized. In this way, the authorized but unappropriated funds will not be lost. My legislation will authorize for each of fiscal year 1998 and 1999—the 11th and 12th years of the EMP—one-half the aggregate of the difference between the amounts authorized for the program for each of the preceding 10 fiscal years and the amount appropriated for the program for such preceding 10 fiscal years.

In the 100th Congress, I had introduced legislation—H.R. 3649—to extend the EMP for one additional year. At that time, however, I did note in my statement of introduction that it was likely by the end of the 10-year program more funds would be caught by this mechanism than could effectively be used in any one fiscal year. Therefore, I stated that in future years I would review the legislation and add further years to the authority of the environmental program if needed. The product of my first review of H.R. 3649 and the current authorization and appropriation picture is the legislation which I am introducing today.

I urge my colleagues to consider becoming cosponsors of this bill to amend the Upper Mississippi River Management Act. This legislation is in keeping with the intent of Congress when it adopted section 1103 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986—balanced management of the upper Mississippi River system.

THE INTRODUCTION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' HEALTH BENEFITS REFORM ACT

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Federal Employees' Health Benefits Reform Act, which will bring the standard of health care for Federal employees, under the Federal Employees Health Benefit Program [FEHBP], up to the levels originally stated for this program with its founding in 1959.

As the largest employees health benefit program, the FEHBP should be an example to private sector programs. Anything less is an affront to congressional intent and a disservice to the 10 million Federal workers, annuitants, and dependents who participate in this program. Unfortunately, this is no longer the case. Under the Reagan administration, Federal workers have seen their health plan coverage diminish substantially, to the point where Federal workers now pay more for less coverage and no longer have health benefits equivalent to those provided by the private sector.

In 1982, the Office of Personnel Management reduced health benefits by an average of 12.5 percent and increased premiums by almost 50 percent. A 1984 study conducted by the Hay Associates for the Post Office and Civil Service Committee shows that Federal health benefits had dropped to 2.2 percent less, as a percentage of pay, for the Federal employee than for the private sector workforce. The 99th and 100th Congresses saw a continuation of this downward trend.

Mr. Speaker this legislation provides several provisions that will bring the current FEHBP up to its originally intended level. These include payment requirements for increased Government contribution toward insurance premiums, allowances for retired and riffed employees, and solvency requirements for self-insured plans. It also provides for increased benefits for employees who require medical treatment for nervous, mental, and emotional disorders, including alcoholism and drug addiction.

This bill requires all plans to provide a minimum of 50 outpatient visits and 60 inpatient visits per year, as well as two 28-day alcoholism or drug abuse treatments per lifetime. Such benefits must be provided with copayments and deductibles at the same level as is required for the treatment of a physical illness. The number of benefits can be increased, but only by approval of a peer review group on a case-by-case basis. Not only should we provide adequate benefits for these disorders because it is the humane thing to do, but also because it is good health policy.

The Federal Health Benefits Reform Act also requires the plans to provide dental coverage and prohibits the OPM from contracting with an insurance carrier for health insurance that is not equivalent to 96 percent of the previous year's contract.

Congress must work to guarantee Federal workers and retirees health insurance that is fair and equitable, and that is comparable to that provided by the private sector.

JESALEE FOSTERLING: A LEGACY OF LEADERSHIP

HON. LES AuCOIN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, it is altogether fitting today, as we begin a new Congress and a new era in American life, to pay tribute to the long years of invaluable service rendered to Oregon, and the Nation, by Jesalee Fosterling.

For year, through a variety of political climates and through some of the toughest ideological fights in Oregon, this native Oregonian has been a leader in the cause of civil rights, especially those relating to reproduction. To quote her directly: "If you can't control your own reproductive system, then you can't control any part of your life."

Always one to put personal philosophy into action, she helped found Planned Parenthood of Portland in 1963, becoming the first president of its board of directors. Five years later she was hired as executive director and served in that capacity ever since. For the last 25 years she has worked steadfastly to insure that family planning services will be available to all who need them, especially the young and the poor whose needs are all too often discounted and forgotten.

In addition to founding and guiding the indispensable Planned Parenthood of the Columbia/Willamette, Jesalee has also been an effective advocate for changes in public policy. In the 1960's, prior to Roe against Wade, she was one of only a few people who took on the challenge of convincing the Oregon Legislature to legalize abortion, and succeeded. Furthermore, she worked continually to keep Federal funding for family planning services through title X.

Recently she was a major force in a prochoice coalition that defeated an attempt to prohibit public funding of abortions for women dependent on the State for medical care. Thanks to Jesalee, and those like her, the right to safe and legal abortion is still available to all women in Oregon, and not just those who can afford to pay.

Jesalee has somehow found the time to contribute to the national Planned Parenthood Federation as well as to the local organization, serving on numerous committees with leadership that earned the respect of her colleagues.

Jesalee has now retired, leaving a great legacy of leadership and compassion. All of us who wish every child born to be wanted, loved, and cared for, owe Jesalee Fosterling a great deal of gratitude. She has had the courage, tenacity, and energy to give herself over to a difficult and controversial cause, to inspire others to join in the battle, and to emerge victorious against tremendous odds.

WISHING CONGRATULATIONS TO ALICE RIDDELL

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, today, I rise to pay tribute to a truly outstanding citizen, Alice Riddell, director of Project 25. On January 27, 1989, she will be honored at a special retirement dinner dance sponsored by Project 25, the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention/Intervention Program of Community School District 25.

Alice Riddell has been a leader in the cause of drug prevention in one aspect or another for her entire career. After graduating from Queens College of the City University of New York in 1963, with a degree in education and home economics, Alice began work as a junior high school adviser and narcotics coordinator. Meanwhile, she continued her education at Queens College, receiving her masters degree in 1966, and becoming certified in narcotics by the College's Narcotic Institute 3 years later.

In 1970, she became narcotics coordinator for Community School District 25, where she developed a superlative drug-abuse awareness program for students, administrators, faculty and parents. Her duties included conducting principals' conferences; arranging lines of referral within schools and to the district office; developing a Pupil Personnel Services Committee; creating training programs; providing crisis services to schools and parents; establishing curricula; and preparing original proposals for funds from the New York State Division of Substance Abuse Services. Her pioneering efforts at district 25 set a standard of excellence for the Nation to follow.

Alice Riddell became the director of Project 25 in 1971 and has remained at that position ever since. As director she designed, administered and supervised the alcohol and drug prevention/intervention programs for the 28 schools in district 25. The exemplary services offered by Project 25 are available to administrators, faculty, students, parents and community members.

Mr. Speaker, Alice Riddell has been an integral part of many other drug and alcohol services. In 1982 she began work as supervisor of an After-School and Summer Counseling Program, and in 1984 she became supervisor of the Early Intervention Alcohol Program. In both of these jobs she helped young children overcome problems associated with adolescence. For several years she taught graduate courses on drug abuse and consumer education at Queens College. Most recently she participated as a member of the New York State Regents Committee for Professional Assistance, which was established by the New York State Education Department to address specific problems of licensed professionals who are themselves substance abusers.

Mr. Speaker, Alice Riddell's outstanding service with Project 25 has not gone unnoticed. In 1982, she received the Frank De Silva Memorial Award for outstanding contributions to field of substance abuse; in 1985 she received the Educator of the Year Award from the Catholic Teachers Association; and in 1986 she was given the Excellence Award in Substance Abuse Prevention at the First New York State Substance Abuse Prevention Conference. She has also been listed on numerous occasions in the "Who's Who" world directory.

Alice Riddell has been a proven leader in the fight against drug and alcohol abuse for over 25 years. Her dedication to this vital cause has touched the lives of everyone in Queens County. Indeed, she is a true pioneer in the field of substance abuse prevention/intervention. I would like all of my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in thanking Alice for her exceptional career, and for her hard work and dedication to such a worthy cause, and to wish the best of luck in her future endeavors.

THE DEFENSE ECONOMIC ADJUSTMENT ACT

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I am today reintroducing legislation to create a national plan for the economic conversion of our defense plants and military bases to civilian production. By providing viable civilian alternatives to military spending, this bill would limit the economic dislocation resulting from the cancellation of military contracts or the closing of bases that are judged unnecessary for the defense of our Nation.

Recent events, such as the signing of the INF Treaty, the possibility of a START agreement, the general thawing of relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, and the just completed work of the base closing commission, as well as budgetary pressures indicate that there will be reductions or realignments in defense contracts and military facilities in the next few years. Unfortunately, the United States is now economically unprepared to deal with the reality of a non-growth defense budget, military base closings and realignment, and new opportunities for arms reductions.

The policy of economic conversion outlined in the Defense Economic Adjustment Act is a means to limit the effects on individuals and on communities of economic dislocation resulting from the inevitable base closings and defense contract reductions or cancellations. Passage of this legislation would also enhance our economic security, broaden our industrial base, and encourage a more balanced and rational process of developing military strategy and pursuing arms reductions.

Economic conversion would simultaneously allow us to pursue an arms reduction strategy designed to halt the nuclear arms race, which threatens to extinguish life on this planet and, at the same time, address the underlying causes of our Nation's current economic decline.

We only need to look around us to see the deterioration caused by our overemphasis on the military economy. The operation of a large military economy for more than 40 years has lead to major underinvestment in the facilities and services which make up our Nation's infrastructure. These include roads, education facilities, libraries, public health operations, and parks.

In addition, as Prof. Seymour Melman, professor emeritus of industrial engineering at Columbia University and renowned author explains:

A process of technical, industrial, and human deterioration has been set in motion within American society. The competence of the industrial system is being eroded at its base. Entire industries are falling into technical disrepair, and there is massive loss of productive employment because of inability to hold even domestic markets against foreign competition.

The current relationship between defense contractors and the Federal Government undermines our international competitiveness, erodes our industrial base, and endangers our economic security by adding billions of dollars to the Federal budget deficit. Defense firms depend on large Federal subsidies to insure their profit levels. Thus, unlike most firms in a free enterprise system, their focus is not on making cheaper or better products. Rather, the military-dependent firm concentrates on producing increasingly complex hardware which will satisfy the needs of a particular defense project, regardless of cost. Often, these firms manufacture products which are essentially useless to the civilian population and uncompetitive in international markets.

There is compelling evidence that military spending creates significantly fewer jobs than comparable spending in the civilian sphere. While civilian production creates items of value for consumers and producers, military production does not. Money spent on the military leaves our economy for good and deprives us of the secondary benefits that commonly result from civilian production. For instance, total employment per $1 billion spent is estimated at 20,175 for guided missile and space vehicle production. This compares with 30,394 jobs created in the motor vehicles industry and 71,550 jobs created in eduction services, according to the calculations of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Our economic reliance on the military results in a severe brain drain of our most advanced technical workers away from civilian fields. Currently, 75 percent of all Federal research and development funds are spent in the military budget. A large percentage of all scientists and engineers are devoted to military related work. In practical terms, this means that many of our trained scientists and engineers are working to devise more complex and destructive military equipment while U.S. productivity is lagging in important areas such as scientific research and computer technology.

Economic conversion, rather than being the economic risk that some have suggested, is an economic opportunity. By applying more of our technical and scientific resources to the civilian economy, we would be better able to address the problems facing many of our Nation's troubled industries. A greater reliance on civilian production could also help train many underemployed and unemployable individuals whose needs are currently unmet.

However, economic conversion is not only an economic imperative. It is also essential if we hope to make meaningful progress toward arms control. In recent years, we have become accustomed to extraordinarily large defense budget requests.

A policy of economic conversion would allow defense policymakers to consider which weapons are truly necessary for the national defense. Many communities are dependent on the employment generated by defense serving firms. For that reason, as history has repeatedly shown, political and community leaders, quite legitimately, often band together to resist the cancellation of weapons systems or the closing of obsolete bases. In addition, the Defense Department uses the prospect of job loss to pressure elected officials into supporting wasteful military spending. As a result, many of our defense decisions reflect political considerations rather than a weapons system's contribution to national security. At a time when many agree that defense spending must be cut to help reduce the Federal budget deficit, the need for economic conversion is all the greater.

By creating viable alternatives to military spending, economic conversion would assure the millions of workers in military dependent industries that their jobs will not be sacrificed in the effort to achieve meaningful arms control. As a result, proposals for increased military spending would more likely be assessed on their merits, rather than for reasons of job creation. This would significantly enhance the prospects for ending the nuclear arms race.

The Defense Economic Adjustment Act provides a detailed plan for preserving the jobs of those affected by decisions to eliminate unnecessary military spending. Importantly, it is a decentralized plan that places the decisionmaking power in the hands of those directly affected by such cutbacks. The plan contains the following key components:

First, the bill calls for the creation of alternative use committees at large defense facilities. These committees, comprised of both labor and management representatives, are charged with developing detailed plans for alternative civilian products.

Second, the bill creates a Cabinet-level Defense Economic Adjustment Council charged with developing plans for public projects that address human needs. The Council also acts as a clearinghouse on existing federal programs relevant to communities affected by military cutbacks and publishes a guidebook for local conversion planners.

Third, the bill calls for 1 year's advance notification of plans to cut back or terminate a defense contract or a military base. The Defense Economic Adjustment Council is responsible for informing the appropriate local officials and the Alternative Use Committees of pending cutbacks.

Fourth, the bill provides for adjustment assistance for communities and workers while conversion is underway. Communities seriously affected by defense cutbacks would be eligible for Federal planning assistance, and individual workers would be eligible for adjustment benefits, including fund for retraining.

If Congress terminates a military contract, the local Alternative Use Committee would then put in motion an existing plan to convert the affected plant to civilian production. The Federal Government would provide guidance and support for the workers and their community, but the new enterprise would receive no subsidy and would have to compete on its own in the marketplace.

As we move into a period of détente in superpower relations and as we begin to rebuild our economic foundation, an economic conversion policy has become a virtual necessity.

The comprehensive plan for economic conversion contained in the defense Economic Adjustment Act would free our Nation from the tyranny of jobs blackmail in the approval of military contracts and allow us to pursue a lasting peace without sacrificing our commitment to increasing employment. Moreover, it would contribute to a national economic renewal by providing resources necessary for the revitalization of basic industries and the repair of our infrastructure.

Economic conversion provides the hope that humanity will manage to survive into a peaceful and prosperous future. It is in this spirit that I urge my colleagues to join me in support of the Defense Economic Adjustment Act.

A copy of the bill is printed below:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Defense Economic Adjustment Act".

DECLARATION OF PURPOSE AND POLICY

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds and declares that during the past three decades the United States has made heavy economic, scientific, and technical commitments for defense; that these commitments led to the development of specialized skills and business practices not directly applicable in the civilian sector of the economy; that as these commitments are modified to take account of changing requirements for national security and domestic needs, careful preparation is necessary if serious economic dislocations are to be avoided; and that the economic ability of the Nation and of management, labor, and capital to adjust to changing national security needs is consistent with the general welfare of the United States.

(b) It is the purpose of this Act to provide the means through which the United States can promote orderly economic adjustment which will (1) minimize the dislocation of workers, communities, and industries, (2) assure that such dislocations do not compound recessionary trends, and (3) encourage conversion of technologies and managerial and worker skills developed in defense production to projects which serve the civilian sector.

The Council shall make available to alternative use committees on a regular basis information on economic development programs of any Federal department, agency, or other instrumentality which provide funds which may be used for such planning. Whenever there is a dispute as to the sale or lease value, the defense agency shall submit such a dispute to the Defense Economic Adjustment Council for resolution.

TITLE III—ALTERNATIVE USE COMMITTEES

ESTABLISHMENT

SEC. 301. The committee shall undertake economic conversion planning and preparation for the employment of the personnel and utilization of the facilities in the event of a reduction or elimination of any defense facility or the curtailment, conclusion, or disapproval of any defense contract.

(1) evaluate the assets of the defense facility and the resources and requirements of the local community in terms of physical property, manpower skills and expertise, accessibility, environment, and economic needs;

(2) develop and review at least once every two years detailed plans for the conversion of the facility to efficient, non-defense-related productive activity to be carried out in the event the facility is affected by a Government decision to reduce, modify, or close the facility, terminate any defense contracts, or disapprove a license to sell or export defense materials to nongovernmental parties;

(3) provide occupational retraining and reemployment counseling services, or ensure that such retraining and services are provided by other Federal, State, or local agencies, for all employees to be displaced by the implementation of a conversion plan or closing of the facility as soon as the date of commencement of the implementation of that plan or the permanent closing of that facility is known as provided for in section 102(a)(1);

(4) dissolve itelf and return all assets to the control of the management of the facility immediately upon final completion of the conversion.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

Any defense agency or contractor and any department, agency, or other instrumentality of the Government shall provide any such inventory or information upon request from an alterative use committee.

CONVERSION PLANS

SEC. 304. (a) The conversion plans shall—

(1) be so designed as to maximize the extent to which the personnel required for the efficient operation of the converted facility can be drawn from personnel with the types and levels of skill approximating skill levels and types possessed by civilian personnel employed at the defense facility prior to its conversion;

(2) specify the numbers of civilian personnel, by type and level of skill, employed at the facility prior to conversion, whose continued employment is not consistent with the efficient operation of the non-defense-related converted facility;

(3) specify the numbers of positions, by level and type of skill, if any, that will be needed at the converted facility because personnel employed at the preconverted facility do not possess the levels or types of skills required;

(4) indicate in detail what new plant and equipment and modifications to existing plant and equipment are required for the converted facility;

(5) include an estimate of financing requirements and a financial plan for the conversion; and

(6) provide for completion of the entire conversion process within a period not to exceed two years.

(b) No plan shall be approved by an alternative use committee unless the plan provides for extension of wage, labor contract provisions, and other benefits to workers at a defense facility until conversion to non-defense-related operations is completed.

PENALTIES

SEC. 305. Each contractor which fails to submit an alternative use plan or refuses or fails to carry out the provisions of a plan approved by the Council shall lose eligibility for future defense contracts for a period of three years, lose contract termination payments, and lose eligibility for tax credits.

TITLE IV—ECONOMIC ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE FOR WORKERS

CERTIFICATION

SEC. 401. (a) All displacements affecting workers employed by a defense contractor attributable, in whole or in part, to a reduction of the volume of defense work in such facility shall, upon certification by the local alternative use committees, be reported by the management of the firm or Government facility to the Defense Economic Adjustment Council and the State employment office acting as agent for the administration of the employees benefit program under this title.

(b) Any worker who loses employment with a defense contractor within the six months preceding a reduction of the volume of defense work of such contractor shall, for purposes of subsection (a), be deemed to be a displacement attributable to that reduction.

(c) Any worker employed by a defense facility not required to have alternative use committees as provided in section 301(a) shall be eligible for benefits in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Council.

ENTITLEMENT TO BENEFITS

SEC. 402. (a) Any worker certified pursuant to section 401 of this Act as eligible for adjustment benefits by reason of such worker's displacement from a defense contractor shall be entitled, for the two-year period following displacement, to whichever of the following benefits are applicable:

(1) Compensation, on a weekly basis, sufficient, when added to any benefits which such worker receives or is entitled to receive for such weekly period under any Federal or State unemployment compensation program (or any plan of such worker's employer providing for such benefits) by reason of such worker displacement, and any earnings during such weekly period from other employment, to maintain an income at a level equal to 90 per centum of the first $20,000 per year and 50 per centum of the next $5,000 in excess of $20,000 for that year, of that worker's regular annual wages (based on a forty-hour workweek, or, in the event a defense contractor has a regular workweek payable at straight-time wage rates other than forty hours, for such regular workweek) prior to that worker's displacement.

(2) Vested pension credit under any applicable pension plan maintained by the defense contractor from which such worker was displaced, for the period of that worker's employment with such facility, and the two-year period following that worker's displacement, during which two-year period, for the purpose of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 and the corresponding provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to a qualified plan) such worker shall be treated as if such worker were employed by such contractor on the same basis as such worker was employed on the day preceding such worker's displacement; except that pension credit during such two-year period shall be reduced to the extent of vested pension credit earned with another employer during such two-year period.

(3) Maintenance of any hospital, surgical, medical, disability, life (and other survivor) insurance coverage which such individual (including members of such individual's family) had by reason of employment by a defense contractor prior to such displacement; except that if such worker so displaced is otherwise employed during such two-year period, such worker shall be entitled to receive benefits under this paragraph to the extent necessary to provide such worker with the same protection described in this paragraph as such worker (including family members) would have had if such worker had not been displaced.

(4)(A) Retraining for civilian work providing pay and status comparable to the employment from which such worker was displaced which is approved by the Secretary of Labor or, in the case of a worker in a State which has entered into a contract with the Council pursuant to section 403 of this Act, by the State agency.

(B) Workers shall be eligible for a job search allowance under the same terms, conditions, and amounts as provided in section 237 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2297).

(5) Reimbursement for reasonable relocation expenses as specified in regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor incurred by such worker in moving to another location in order to take advantage of a non-defense-related employment opportunity to which such worker is referred, or which is determined to be suitable, by the Secretary of Labor or, in the case of a State which has entered into a contract with the Council pursuant to section 403 of this Act, by the State agency.

(b) All managerial and technical employees who have spent more than 50 per centum of the ten years preceding implementation of the conversion plan working in defense-related industry or at military bases must participate in or have completed a program of professional retraining meeting the requirements specified in the Conversion Guidelines Handbook of the Defense Economic Adjustment Council in order to be eligible for the special financial assistance, relocation aid, and special job information services provided by this Act. All other employees may elect to enter such a program.

STATE AGREEMENTS

SEC. 403. (a) The Council shall, on behalf of the United States, enter into an agreement with a State, or with any agency administering the unemployment compensation law of any State approved by the Secretary of Labor under section 3304 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, which—

(1) as agent of the Council, shall upon certification and other determinations required in section 401 of this Act, make such payments and provide such benefits as are authorized by section 402 of this Act, on the basis provided for in this Act, and shall otherwise cooperate with the Council and other State agencies in carrying out the provisions of this Act; and

(2) shall be reimbursed for all benefits paid pursuant to such agreement and all administrative and operational costs incurred in carrying out such agreement.

(b)(1) There shall be paid to each State agency which has an agreement under this section, either in advance or by way of reimbursement, as may be determined by the Council, such sum as the Council estimates the agency will be entitled to receive under such agreement for each calendar month, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which the Council finds that its estimates for any prior calendar month were greater or less than amounts which should have been paid to the agency. Such estimates may be made upon the basis of statistical sampling, or other method as agreed upon by the Council and the State agency.

(2) The Council shall from time to time certify to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to each State agency which has an agreement under this section sums payable to such agency under paragraph (1) of this subsection. The Secretary of the Treasury, prior to audit or settlement by the general Accounting Office, shall make payments to the agency, in accordance with such certification, from the fund.

(3) All money paid a State agency under any such agreement shall be used solely for the purposes for which it is paid; and any money so paid which is not used for such purposes shall be returned, at the time specified in such agreement, to the Treasury.

(c) In any case involving a worker entitled to benefits under section 402 who is in a State with respect to which there is no agreement pursuant to this section, the Secretary of Labor shall, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, administer such benefits on behalf of such worker. The Secretary of Labor, in administering such benefits, shall, from time to time, certify to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to such worker the amounts of such benefits to which such worker and the Secretary of the Treasury shall make payments to such worker, in accordance with such certification, from the fund.

LIMITATION ON BENEFITS

SEC. 404. In no case shall any displaced worker be eligible for benefits under section 402(a) of this Act unless such worker agrees (1) to maintain, on a current basis, during the period of this displacement, an active registration with the Secretary of Labor or an appropriate State employment agency, as the case may be, and (2) to accept any employment determined by the Secretary of Labor or agency, as the case may be, to be of the same skill or work of a similar nature, at the same pay as such worker was receiving before such worker was displaced. No such benefits shall be paid under this Act to any worker who fails to maintain such registration or to accept such employment.

TREATMENT OF UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

SEC. 405. In no case shall any adjustment benefits paid pursuant to this Act be taken into consideration in determining eligibility for, or the amount of, unemployment compensation under any Federal or State unemployment compensation law.

TERMINATION OF BENEFITS

SEC. 406. Adjustment benefits shall terminate when a worker eligible for benefits obtains employment providing 90 per centum of the first $20,000 per year and 50 per centum of the next $5,000 in excess of $20,000 for that year of that worker's previous wages, or two years after displacement, whichever occurs sooner.

TITLE V—ECONOMIC ADJUSTMENT FUND

FUND ESTABLISHED

SEC. 501. There is hereby established in the Treasurey of the United States a trust fund to be known as the Workers Economic Adjustment Reserve Trust Fund.

DEPOSITS INTO THE FUND

SEC. 502. (a)(1) The Federal Government shall not enter into any contract with any person to furnish defense material or services to a defense agency, nor shall it permit the sale of such defense material or services to or on behalf of any country, unless the contract requires the contractor to pay into the fund an amount equal to 1¼ per centum per year of the value of the contractor's gross revenue on such sales.

(2) Payments pursuant to this section shall be computed in such manner, and paid at such time, as the Council, after consultation with the Comproller General, shall by regulation prescribe.

(3) In no case shall payments required pursuant to this section be considered as a cost item in the negotiating or bidding of any defense contract, or in determining profit for purposes of this section of any provisions of law relating to the renegotiation of defense contracts.

(4) Amounts paid by a defense contractor pursuant to this section shall be deposited in the fund.

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury shall determine the projected savings in defense spending as a result of cancellation or cutback of a program or contract and shall deposit 10 per centum of the projected savings in the fund.

(c) Contract termination payments withheld pursuant to section 305 shall be deposited in the fund.

(d) There is authorized to be appropriated to the fund such amounts as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make the payments and other disbursements authorized by this Act.

SEC. 503. (a) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to invest such portion of the moneys in the fund as is not, in the judgment of the Secretary, required to meet current withdrawal requirement. Such investments may be made only in interest-bearing obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States. For such purpose, such obligations may be acquired (1) on original issue at the issue price, or (2) by purchase of outstanding obligations at the market price. The purposes for which obligations of the United States may be issued under chapter 31 of title 31, United States Code, are hereby extended to authorize the issuance at par of special obligations exclusively to the fund. Such special obligations shall bear interest at a rate equal to the average rate of interest, computed as to the end of the calendar month next preceding the date of such issue, borne by all marketable interest-bearing obligations of the United States then forming part of the public debt; except that where such coverage rate is not a multiple of one-eighth of 1 per centum, the rate of interest of such special obligations shall be the multiple of one-eighth of 1 per centum next lower than such average rate. Such obligations shall be issued only if the Secretary of the Treasury determines that the purchase of other interest-bearing obligations of the United States, or of obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States on original issue or at the market price, is not in the public interest.

(b) Any obligations acquired by the fund (except special obligations issued exclusively to the fund) may be sold by the Secretary of the Treasury at the market price, and such special obligations may be reduced at par plus accrued interest.

FBI FIRST AMENDMENT PROTECTION ACT

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, today the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS] and I are introducing legislation to establish a simple principle: the Federal Bureau of Investigation should not be monitoring first amendment activities—taking pictures at demonstrations, collecting leaflets and publications, writing down license plate numbers outside conferences—without some direct relevance to the investigation of criminal activity.

In most of its investigations, the FBI already adheres to a criminal standard. It opens a case only when it has reason to believe that a crime has been, is being, or will be committed. However, as was revealed last year, the FBI in some cases will investigate lawful activity by U.S. citizens who support foreign groups. This makes it hard for the FBI to define the scope of its own investigations. It means that the Bureau monitors first amendment activities—marches, meetings, rallies, conferences, demonstrations, petitioning, organizing—of U.S. citizens even where there is no reason to believe that evidence of Federal crimes can be collected.

The bill we are introducing today specifies that the FBI should follow a criminal standard in opening and conducting cases that may involve the collection of information on first amendment rights.

Since 1976, the FBI has adhered to this criminal standard in all its investigations of domestic terrorism, and it has not been hampered at all in its effort to keep domestic terrorism under control. To the contrary, it has been very successful, making important arrests and putting members of dangerous groups in jail.

The FBI should adhere to the same standard in investigating international terrorism. If the FBI receives credible information that an individual or group is engaging in illegal activities, it should investigate those illegal activities. Anything short of the criminal standard means that the FBI will be free to broadly investigate a U.S. group that "supports" a foreign entity our Government has labeled terrorist, even if the U.S. group is not engaged in illegal activity.

In testimony last year before House and Senate committees, the Director of the FBI testified that the secret Attorney General guidelines under which the FBI operates do not contain sufficient guidance and specificity on how to investigate groups that "support" international terrorism. Our bill would provide that guidance and specificity by establishing a criminal standard for all FBI investigations that may involve surveillance of the exercise of First Amendment rights. Our bill would put some specificity in the words "aiding or abetting" in the current Attorney General guidelines, making it clear that the FBI can investigate a domestic group only if it engages in illegal conduct.

Our bill also addresses the question of what to do with the files after a case is closed where the FBI improperly collected information on first amendment activities. The bill would require the FBI to dispose of the records in a manner that protects the individuals whose names show up in those files. The provision ensures that the records may not be disseminated inside the Bureau and may not be disseminated outside the Bureau except to requesters under the FOIA and the Privacy Act. The records will be preserved for historical purposes and will be available to the record subjects, who have a right to know what surveillance they were subject to.

The requirements in the bill are not onerous. They establish a clear reliable standard that will protect the rights of Americans and ensure that the FBI, when it investigates U.S. persons, focuses on criminal activity.

Americans have a right to express peacefully support for anyone and anything, and they should not have the FBI looking over their shoulder. The FBI is our Nation's premier law enforcement agency. It should focus on what it does best: catching criminals and spies.

THE GUARDIANSHIP RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES ACT OF 1989

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing the Guardianship Rights and Responsibilities Act of 1989, legislation that I introduced at the end of the last Congress. This legislation will establish a bill of rights for adults who, either because of physical or mental status, become wards or conservatees of the courts.

Today, across the country, as many as 500,000 adults have been made wards under court guardianship/conservatorship programs. Wards are individuals whose legal rights, decisionmaking authority, and/or possessions have been transferred to someone else's control. While guardianships can be a positive way of protecting the well-being of those incapable of protecting themselves, the current fragmented system provides few safeguards to assure that only those most in need of guardianships are affected, and then only to the extent of their need.

Indeed, in a recent 50-State survey conducted by the Associated Press, it was concluded that wards lose their basic civil rights, often without the protections afforded criminal defendants. For example, there are few due-process protections and the rules of evidence often do not apply: In 44 percent of the cases studied, the alleged ward was not represented by an attorney; in 49 percent of the cases, alleged wards were not present at their hearings; and in 34 percent of the cases, the files contained no medical evidence supporting the need for a guardian.

Further, because few courts grant limited guardianships, an individual, who may have difficulty managing his or her checkbook and who may need assistance in this area only, will also lose such basic civil rights as the right to vote, to decide where to live, to marry or divorce, or to determine the kind of medical help he or she will receive. And those who only need temporary assistance may find it difficult, if not impossible, to have their ward status removed. In 35 States, advanced old age alone is an adequate reason for placing a person under a guardianship.

Guardians are often well-meaning family members who are seeking to protect an older relative. But guardianships are also granted to virtually any competent person, so that many wards are supervised by those who have little or no specialized training which will enable them to deal with the financial, psychological, and biological problems that caring for an older ward will present. In some States, businesses have developed which provide guardianships for those without families, yet standards do not exist to protect against exploitation.

Given the limited or complete absence of supervision or control, it is not surprising that there are many stories of guardians who embezzle assets, provide substandard care, or force unnecessary nursing home care on those over whom they are responsible. Only five States prohibit convicted felons from being appointed as guardians.

I am pleased to point to Maine as an example of a State that has led the way in revising its own standards for guardianships and conservatorships. In many States, however, much needs to be done. And all States carry the same burden of an overloaded court system that would like to do a better job on behalf of those who come before them as alleged or adjudicated wards.

The legislation I am introducing today amends Medicaid to establish minimum standards through a Guardianship Rights and Responsibilities Act. As a condition for participation in the Medicaid Program, States would have 2 years in which to alter their State plans to assure protection of the basic rights identified in this legislation. Since about 50 percent of wards will be placed in nursing homes, Medicaid will ultimately finance their long-term care and, as such, should be an important vehicle for protecting their civil rights.

Because all wards must be assured of one standard of care, this bill of rights will apply to all alleged wards and wards, regardless of place of residence. States will have latitude in determining how they will meet the minimum rights, with the Secretary of Health and Human Services maintaining oversight as to whether the State has substantially complied with the spirit and letter of the Federal provisions.

Among the key elements of this legislation are guarantees to assure due process, the use of clear and convincing evidence in determining the need for a guardian, the use of the least restrictive guardianship, and the establishment of standards for training and monitoring guardians.

In order to assist States to protect wards, this legislation will establish a $5 million, 2-year demonstration grant which will enable States to develop and implement a Guardianship Advocates Program [GAP]. The Guardianship Advocates Program will fill gaps in the present system by providing an advocacy and monitoring function. These court advocates will work within the court system to handle guardianship and conservatorship cases. Guardianship advocates will inform proposed wards of their rights, make recommendations to judges, assist with termination proceedings, be responsible for periodic monitoring and review of reports relating to the physical and financial well-being of wards, and, in general, assist the courts and the wards in the guardianship proceedings. I believe that the success of these demonstration projects will assure that, ultimately, such systems are established in every State to assist wards, guardians and judges to provide the best possible care and protection to those in need.

As you know, we have pledged in this Congress to focus on long-term care. As yet, however, long-term care has been narrowly defined from a service perspective. I believe that long-term care legislation must also address the importance that continued personal autonomy plays in assuring health and well-being. Because most wards will lose the right, long term, to make decisions about their own health and welfare, they are particularly vulnerable. In my view, the needs of our citizens for home health, respite and nursing home care are equaled by the need to have their personal rights protected. This legislation will address the rights of those who are the least able to speak for themselves and, consequently, the most vulnerable to exploitation.

The text of the Guardianship Rights and Responsibilities Act of 1989 follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

"(A) neither such per centum may be reduced more than 25 percentage points by reason of this paragraph; and

"(B) no reduction shall be made under this paragraph for any quarter following the quarter during which such State meets the requirements of paragraph (1).".

(c) DESCRIPTION OF REQUIREMENTS.—Title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.) is amended by redesignating section 1925 as section 1926 and by inserting after section 1924 the following new section:

"(c) STANDARDS FOR DETERMINATIONS OF INCAPACITY.—The laws of the State shall provide that—

"(2) no person who has been convicted of a felony may be appointed to serve as a guardian in the State unless the court determines that an exception to such prohibition is appropriate in a particular case; and

"(3) no person may be appointed to serve as a guardian in the State unless such person has filed, and the court conducting the guardianship hearing has approved, a guardianship plan which includes at least a description of the ward's proposed living arrangements, a plan for meeting the ward's financial, medical, and other remedial needs, and provisions for maintaining contact between the ward and the ward's family and friends.

"(3) each guardian in the State shall keep the court which issued the order giving such guardian control over the ward's affairs informed of the whereabouts of such ward, and shall notify such court whenever such ward is moved to a new residence.

"(j) STANDARDS REGARDING WARDS MOVING TO AND FROM STATE.—The laws of the State shall provide that—

"(1) if the court which issued a guardianship order receives notice pursuant to subsection (i)(3) that a ward has been moved to a new residence in another State, the court shall notify the appropriate court in that State of the existence of the guardianship and shall provide that court with necessary files and background information on the guardianship; and

"(2) upon receiving notice from a court in another State that a ward subject to a guardianship order has been moved into the State, a court in the State shall assume jurisdiction over such guardianship, and may require the guardian to submit a new petition for guardianship or any other supplementary information to enable the court to exercise such jurisdiction.

"(k) COURT REVIEW OF GUARDIANSHIP ORDERS.—Each court in the State which issues a guardianship order shall conduct an annual review of the guardianship to determine whether the guardian is performing his duties in accordance with the appropriate laws and whether the guardianship should be continued, modified, or terminated.

TRIBUTE TO BARBARA SHAW

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Barbara Shaw, a distinguished citizen of Contra Costa County. It gives me great pleasure to congratulate Barbara on her being selected by California's Governor as the State's outstanding Job Training Partnership Act Program volunteer for 1987–88. Barbara was chosen from among many exemplary representatives of California's 51 private industry councils.

Mrs. Shaw's selection, for which she will represent California in the national JTPA Presidential Awards Program, is an acknowledgment of her record of accomplishment in the job training area. Barbara is owner and principal of Barbara Shaw Seminars, a management and training consulting firm which provides services throughout the United States. She has been a member of the Private Industry Council in Contra Costa County since its formation in 1983, and has excelled at numerous key posts, including committee chair and vice chair, and PIC chair for two full terms. She is currently a member of the PIC Executive Committee.

In addition to her PIC duties, Barbara serves on the Board of Directors of the National Association of Private Industry Councils [NAPIC], and as a member of the NAPIC Task Force on Building PICS for the Nineties.

Barbara was selected as California's outstanding JTPA program volunteer for her commitment and able leadership in the job training system. Her expertise on JTPA performance standards, and on the type of public-private partnership arrangements necessary for effective welfare reform, has earned State and national recognition. Barbara has been instrumental in establishing many of the practices and standards now found in the job training system. She led the effort to convince the Department of Labor to abandon the concept of allowing youth employment programs to be considered successful even if no youths were placed in jobs. Her leadership also resulted in the establishment of a PIC-funded Business Resource Center, and the implementation of a coordinated Summer Youth Jobs Program in Contra Costa County which helped approximately 3,000 youths find unsubsidized summer jobs.

Mr. Speaker, at a time when our country's international competitiveness depends increasingly on high worker productivity, the efforts of talented and dedicated job training volunteers like Barbara Shaw are essential. Their activities prepare people to enter the work force and contribute immediately to whatever organization they join.

Once again, I extend my congratulations to Barbara Shaw. She has made her community, her husband Stephen, and her children Justin and Stacey, proud.

ANIMAL WELFARE PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to introduce legislation, the Animal Welfare Protection Act of 1989, designed to improve enforcement of the Animal Welfare Act.

In the fall of 1986, thousands of Wisconsinites expressed their outrage at the exploits of an animal dealer who since 1981 had been repeatedly cited by the USDA for major violations of the Animal Welfare Act. I contacted the USDA to request an immediate investigation and appropriate disciplinary action. To my dismay, the best the USDA could do under current law was file a formal complaint and initiate a lengthy review and hearing procedure. All the while, the dealer continued to conduct business as usual.

When the case finally resolved, the dealer received a small fine and had his license revoked for 20 days. These light penalties are more the norm than the exception. USDA officials readily agree that stiffer penalties are needed to curtail serious abuses of the Animal Welfare Act. In an effort to rectify this situation, I sat down with USDA officials to draft the Animal Welfare Protection Act.

My legislation will put teeth into the enforcement practices of the Animal Welfare Act. Under my proposal, the USDA will have the authority to request a temporary restraining order or injunction from a U.S. district court. The court order will allow the USDA to suspend immediately the operation of animal dealers, carriers, exhibitors, or intermediate handlers who knowingly deal in stolen animals or place the health of animals covered under the act in serious danger.

Last year, the Administrator of the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service [APHIS] testified in support of my proposal before the Agriculture Committee. APHIS inspectors are charged with enforcing the Animal Welfare Act and recognize the need for the authority to suspend the operations of unscrupulous animal dealers while an investigation is pending.

Simply put, my bill will afford the USDA a greater ability to initiate prompt disciplinary action in cases of serious violations of the Animal Welfare Act. In fact, the Animal Welfare Protection Act of 1989 is closely modeled after a similar provision in the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 which helps prevent unsanitary meat packaging operations.

If the Animal Welfare Act is to be enforced properly, the USDA must have the appropriate authority. At present, it normally takes the USDA 1 to 2 years to process violations of the Animal Welfare Act. Even if an animal dealer is found guilty of serious offenses, it is highly unlikely that their license will be revoked. Since 1983, only one licensed animal dealer has had his license permanently revoked.

My proposal will ensure that individuals who deal in animals must comply with the standards of the act or face the prospect of immediate cessation of operations. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation which gives USDA inspectors the authority they need to crack down on unscrupulous animal dealers.

COMMUNITY ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1987

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced the Community Adjustment Act of 1989, which would establish a program addressed specifically to those areas of this country which are hardest hit by economic dislocations—those suffering long-term economic dislocations, primarily those based on declining industrial sectors, where there are no replacement jobs to provide alternative employment and tax base; and those areas which have lost, or are threatened with the loss of, their major employer.

The important features of this program are that they couple this place-oriented assistance with the people-oriented help provided by title III of the Job Training Partnership Act. JTPA has effectively provided training for displaced workers where alternative employment exists, but it cannot be fully effective where there are no jobs for which to train dislocated workers.

My bill also puts more emphasis on prospective action: It requires the Secretary of Commerce to monitor the national economy for potential nationwide dislocations and, where needed, to assist local jurisdictions in monitoring their own economies so they can take action either to keep a plant open, or help it reopen, with as little disruption to employees' lives and the local economy as possible.

It provides grants to States, economic development districts, Indian tribes and units of local government to design community adjustment strategies, and then to establish locally run revolving loan funds. These RLF's could be used for loans or loan guarantees for start-up and working capital, fixed assets, purchase, rehabilitation or expansion of facilities or equipment, or to keep the failing business in operation.

The bill also contains an extensive technical assistance section.

It is extremely important, in this time of fiscal restraint, to make our scarce resources go as far as they can. The bill therefore relies to a great extent on technical assistance to do what the limited grant program cannot. We know that we cannot provide financial assistance to every community faced with economic dislocation. Therefore, the bill contains a broad range of alternative forms of assistance.

Prior to applying for any further help, the community can go to the Secretary as soon as it learns that its main employer, be it a plant or Government installation, is going to close, or if it has already closed. The community can ask for, and the Secretary must provide, advisors, consultants, or other assistance, to try to keep the plant open, to find a new buyer, organize an ESOP or workers' coop, or whatever other assistance is needed, to keep the plant open, or to reopen it.

Some communities will be able to receive full funding under this program, first for the adjustment strategy, then for the RLF. But there simply isn't enough money for this full range of aid to all employees.

My bill therefore provides a full range of technical assistance to other communities, including technical assistance teams and nationally recognized experts, to come in and do an analysis, working with the community, to try to find alternative employment—not fast food, minimum wage, low-skill-type jobs, but real, substantive and skilled replacement employment of the kind the workers used to enjoy.

Finally, because limited resources will not allow even technical assistance to all areas, the bill provides for broad dissemination of the experiences gained under this program for many more communities to learn from, and pursue their adjustments on their own without any further help from this program.

The bill also requires the Secretary to give priority funding to new, innovative, or previously unevaluated approaches to economic adjustment. Grant recipients are required to report on the implementation of their strategies for 5 years after the first grant, so that the Secretary will have, for the first time, a full survey of the successes and failures of various approaches, which will be made available to any community.

The bill also puts new emphasis on capacity building at the local level. Applicants must not only show how they intend to implement the adjustment strategy, but must also show how they will be able to continue the adjustment on their own after the grant period. The point is to get the Federal Government in as soon as possible, and out again in 2 years, leaving the community able to continue the adjustment process on its own.

Finally, my bill puts new emphasis on the private sector, not only to participate in the adjustment, but to use its tremendous expertise in identifying replacement industry, and in locating venture and other capital and sources of expertise to help in the adjustment.

I realize that one of the greatest criticisms of the current Economic Development Administration Program is that 80 percent of the Nation is currently eligible. My amendment therefore would single out those most hard-hit areas by requiring the Secretary to develop criteria to make only 20 percent to 25 percent of the population eligible under the long-term economic dislocation criterion.

Of course, any area would be eligible for assistance if its major employer closes with little or no advance warning, or if it is stricken by a Presidentially declared natural disaster. A particular industry could also be eligible, such as fishermen who are badly hurt by a natural phenomenon such as El Nino, which wiped out the fisheries of the Northwest several years ago.

The bill authorized $100 million per year over 3 years for community adjustment strategies and revolving loan funds, and $25 million per year for the technical assistance programs.

I believe that this bill is necessary, and will provide the greatest bang for the economic development buck—providing the full range of assistance for some communities, extensive technical assistance for others, and the accumulated experiences of the program for any community stricken by severe economic dislocation, short or long term.

It is a fresh, innovative approach to help those which are left behind when the economy is good, and which are almost destroyed when the national economy falters.

Attached is a summary of the bill.

MENTAL HEALTH AND AGING ACT

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, based on studies and hearings by my Committee on Aging and developed in partnership with key national mental health and aging organizations, the Mental Health and Aging Act takes another critical step toward addressing the unmet mental health needs of America's elderly and disabled.

America's elderly and nonelderly need improved mental health services. In terms of the elderly, current estimates indicate that between 15 and 25 percent of Americans over the age of 65 suffer from significant mental health problems. This means that as many as 7 million elderly Americans currently need professional mental health services, but very few are receiving treatment of any kind. For children, as for other nonelderly persons, underservedness is a major problem as well.

In spite of great need, estimates indicate that as many as 80 percent of those elderly in need of mental health services fail to receive them, and elderly persons are seriously underrepresented among persons receiving treatment for mental disorders. Responding to the great need of mentally impaired elderly persons, as well as nonelderly persons, for improved care and assistance, I am reintroducing the Mental Health and Aging Act today.

This "Mental Health Initiative" attempts to rectify major deficiencies in Medicare, Medicaid, the mental health block grant and Federal research and training programs. It shifts Medicare and Medicaid funds toward outpatient care, and expands the range of Medicare and Medicaid mental health providers. The bill targets over $30 million toward the elderly, and greatly expands consumer protection (including an enforceable consumer bill of rights). In addition, it puts a higher priority on elderly mental health research and training, and launches an Institute of Medicine study on quality assurance and program effectiveness.

Last year, the 100th Congress approved two of my bill's provisions—(1) expanded demonstration funds for rural populations and (2) a National Mental Health Education Program—as well as provision, supported by Chairman WAXMAN and myself, to set aside 10 percent of the alcohol and drug abuse and mental health services block grant for children. Though it did not survive the House/Senate conference, the House also approved my provision to set aside a portion of the block grant's mental health funding for the elderly. In the 1987 budget reconciliation bill, the Medicare outpatient limit was raised to $1,100 for 1989.

Progress was made in the 100th Congress, but much more remains to be done in the 101st Congress. In that effort, I look forward to working together with House and Senate Members to raise mental health care to the same status as other health care supported by the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the description and text of the Mental Health and Aging Act be included in the RECORD.

SUMMARY OF MENTAL HEALTH AND AGING ACT OF 1989

PURPOSE

To provide improved Medicare and Medicaid mental health benefits and to encourage the development of community based services for mentally impaired elderly persons, children and their families.

SUMMARY

America's elderly are in need of improved mental health services. Current estimates indicate that between 15 and 25 percent of Americans over the age of 65 suffer from significant mental health problems. This means that as many as 7 million elderly Americans currently need professional mental health services, but very few are receiving treatment of any kind.

Elderly persons display a wide range of mental health complaints. Depression, alcohol abuse, and the misuse of prescription drugs are serious problems, and men over the age of 75 have the highest suicide rate of any age group. Many chronically mentally disabled persons are now living into old age, and while dementia and severe cognitive impairment are increasingly prevalent, estimates indicate that as many as 30 percent of older Americans who are labeled "senile" actually have reversible, treatable conditions.

In spite of such great need, estimates indicate that as many as 80 percent of those elderly in need of mental health services fail to receive them, and elderly persons are seriously under-represented among persons receiving treatment for mental disorders. Responding to the great need of mentally impaired elderly persons for improved care and assistance, the Mental Health and Aging Act of 1989 proposes the following initiatives:

Expands funding for, and encourages development of, community based services for mentally impaired elderly and their families.

Increases biomedical, behavioral and social research and research on prevention, treatment and services for mentally impaired elderly and their families.

Increases training of health care professionals and paraprofessionals relative to elderly mental health.

Expands Medicare benefits for outpatient and community based mental health services.

Requires Medicaid programs to include community based mental health services for eligible recipients.

Requires nursing homes under Medicare and Medicaid to include mental health in plans of care and to ensure access to mental health services.

Establishes Medicare mental health cost containment measures.

Creates Consumer Bill of Rights, establishes quality assurance protection and requires quality assurance and program effectiveness study.

PROVISIONS

Title 1: Development of Mental Health Services for the Elderly (Title 1 is effective on October 1, 1989.)

Section 101. Alcohol and Drug Abuse and Mental Health Services Block Grant. Establishes a set-aside of the block grant for improving mental health services for the elderly.

Funds are to be used to develop more effective services and service delivery systems for the elderly and to improve access and quality assurance programs for mentally impaired elderly and their families. (Note: The 1988 bill's section with respect to children was incorporated into last year's Omnibus Drug Initiative Act, H.R. 5210). Within these populations, special attention is to be given to racial and ethnic minorities and other underserved populations. Requires States to document increased outreach and services for mentally impaired elderly and their families/caregivers, including those elderly living in the community or nursing homes.

Requires States receiving block grant funds to establish, according to regulations determined by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, an appropriate mechanism for ensuring quality of and access to services.

Requires providers and agencies providing mental health services funded under the block grant to comply with the provisions of the Consumer Bill of Rights (See below).

With their allocation, States are to spend on elderly programs at least a percentage, equal to the percentage of elderly people (age 65 and over) in a State, of the funds spent on mental health. Implementation of the elderly set-aside is contingent upon the total Alcohol and Drug Abuse and Mental Health grant receiving an appropriation of at least $535 million.

Sec. 102. Grant Program for Demonstration Projects. Expand the current program to encourage development and coordination of community based services and social support systems for mentally impaired elderly and their families/caregivers. Develop community based services for mentally impaired elderly and their families/caregivers, including those elderly living in the community or nursing homes.

Develop systems of coordination and cooperation among elderly health, mental health, and social service providers, including Area and State Agencies on Aging and Area and State Mental Health Administrations.

Develop programs for outreach and public education regarding the utility, availability, and barriers to elderly use of mental health services, including programs targeted to specific age cohorts and minorities.

SEC. 103. Training of health care professionals, allied health professionals, and paraprofessionals. Increases training of health care professionals, allied health professionals, and paraprofessionals, with special attention to memers of racial and ethnic minority groups, in order to improve the prevention, diagnosis, treatment, and managment of mental disorders among the elderly.

SEC. 104. Biomedical, behavioral and social research on prevention, treatment, and services. Increases biomedical, behavioral and social research on prevention, treatment, and service delivery for mentally impaired elderly. The Department of Health and Human Services is required to develop a plan of prevention, treatment, and service delivery research related to elderly mental health and psychosocial well-being and to implement it through the National Institute on Aging, the National Institute of Mental Health, and the Administration on Aging.

Adds $8 million in FY 1990, $16 million in FY 1991, and $24 million in FY 1992 to NIMH research programs on elderly mental health. At least 10% of these funds are to be used for service delivery research.

Adds $2 million in FY 1990, $4 million in FY 1991, and $6 million in FY 1992 to AoA's research and demonstration programs on elderly mental health.

SEC. 105. Institute of Medicine study of quality assurance and program effectiveness. Requires Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to contract with the Institute of Medicine for a study of quality assurance and program effectiveness with respect to mental health services.

Title 2: Medicare and medicaid services and cost containment.

SEC. 201. Outpatient and community based mental health services. Reforms Medicare and Medicaid outpatient and community based mental health service benefits as follows:

Changes current law so that medical management (including an initial assessment and evaluation) of psychiatric disorders is not a mental health service under Medicare Part B, is not counted toward the annual outpatient reimbursement limit and should be reimbursed as a physician service. Medical management visits are "visits of shorter duration than therapy or treatment sessions and for which the main purpose is to permit the attending provider to assess the patient's status, assess the individual's prescription drug plan and progress and peform necessary laboratory tests." (As per Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, House Committee on Energy and Commerce.) (Effective January 1, 1991.)

Abolishes the 50 percent copayment requirement and the annual dollar reimbursement limit for mental health services under Medicare Part B in favor of a 20 percent copayment requirement with an annual limit of 20 covered visits. Coverage may be extended based upon necessity reviews to be conducted through a mechanism determined by the Secretary of Health and Human Services in consultation with provider and consumer representatives. (Effective January 1, 1990.)

Specifies that the delivery of mental health services or psychopharmacological drugs to patients with physical conditions independently sufficient to require nursing home care shall not be considered an indication that a facility is an Institution for Mental Disease (IMD) under Medicaid.

Specifies that staff persons with specialized psychiatric or psychological training shall not be considered an indication that a facility is an Institution for Mental Disease (IMD) under Medicaid.

Sec. 203. Requirement of access to mental health services for nursing home residents. Requires access to mental health services for all nursing home patients as a condition of participation under Medicare and Medicaid (details contained in section on Conditions of Participation). (Effective with OBRA 1987.)

Requires that all providers of mental health services under Medicare Part B accept assignment for mental health services; i.e., accept Medicare reimbursement as payment in full (except for deductibles and coinsurance) for mental health services.

Clarifies that Fiscal Intermediary and Carrier Utilization review, as well as beneficiary appeal of such review, shall incorporate review of all new services provided under Medicare as a result of this Act.

Requires indexing of mental health outpatient payments based upon the average of the urban consumer price index (CPI) and the Medicare medical economic index (MEI).

Requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services, in consultation with mental health providers and consumers, to develop a prospective pricing (fee-based system) of outpatient mental health services. (Effective January 1, 1991.)

Sec. 206. Conditions of participation for Medicare and Medicaid for quality assurance and access protection. Requires the Department of Health and Human Services to establish conditions of participation as follows (Effective January 1, 1991.):

All mental health providers under Medicare and Medicaid shall (a) comply with the Consumer Bill of Rights (see Bill of Rights below); (b) provide the client with written grievance procedures appropriate for all services; and (c) give in writing the services to be provided. All health maintenance organizations or competitive medical plans providing services under Medicare and Medicaid shall provide, according to regulations determined by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, an appropriate package of mental health benefits and an appropriate mechanism for ensuring quality of and access to services provided under those benefits.

All hospitals and nursing homes providing services to chronically mentally ill individuals under Medicare and Medicaid shall have a discharge plan for all such individuals which assures that they will have a plan for mental health care and for coordination of services established prior to discharge.

Section 207. Peer review of mental health services. Clarifies that for both Medicare and Medicaid, future contracts for PRO review shall incorporate review of all new and current services provided under those programs as a result of this Act.

Mental health care consumer bill of rights. Establishes a Mental Health Care Consumer Bill of Rights applicable to all mental health consumers and providers under Medicare, Medicaid, and the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Block Grant and provides, mechanism to ensure enforcement of the following provisions:

The right to receive an itemized copy of these charges and advance notice detailing changes in services or charges. This includes the right to be promptly notified of the acceptance or denial of treatment and services and the reasons for denial, and to receive reasonable notice if treatment, care or services are to be reduced or terminated. The right to assistance to assure a smooth transition in services consistent with client welfare.

5. The right to grievance procedures if rights are violated or services are not satisfactory, including the right to an impartial grievance procedure provided for or by the program or facility.

6. The right to receive treatment, care and services from individuals who are properly trained and competent to perform their duties and in compliance with all state and local laws and regulations.

7. The right to ongoing participation, in a manner appropriate to an individual's capabilities, in the planning of one's mental health services (including the right to participate in the development and periodic revision of the plan of care described in item (3)). In addition to the right to be provided with a reasonable explanation, in terms and language appropriate to the person's cultural background and ability, the right to understand one's mental condition and general physical condition, the objectives of treatment, the nature and significant possible adverse effects of recommended treatments, and, the reasons why a particular treatment is considered appropriate in addition to any appropriate alternative treatments, services, and types of providers of mental health services.

8. The right to refuse a mode or course of treatment, established in accordance with the treatment plan, in the absence of the individual's informed, voluntary, written consent to this particular mode or course of treatment. An exception may be made during an emergency situation if this treatment is documented by a written order of an appropriate mental health professional as necessary for the immediate safety and welfare of the individual or as permitted under applicable state law in the case of a person committed by a court to a treatment program or facility.

9. The right to be informed fully of the provider's assessment of the patient/client's condition upon request. An exception may be made if contraindicated by documentation by the mental health professional in the client record that such access would be detrimental to the individual's health. In this instance, material may be then be made available to a similarly licensed health professional selected by the client and this health professional may, in the exercise of professional judgement, provide the client with access to any or all parts of this material or otherwise disclose the information contained in this material to the individual client.

10. The right, in the case of an individual admitted on a residential or inpatient care basis, to converse with others privately, to have convenient and reaonable access to the telephone, mails, and to see visitors during regularly scheduled hours.

NOTE.—While this bill addresses mental health directly, Congressman Roybal introduced several other bills in the 100th Congress which address mental health needs. The "Comprehensive Alzheimer's Assistance, Research, and Education Act—CARE" (H.R. 3130) provides better care and assistance for Alzheimer's Disease and related disorders victims and their families. The "US Health Program Act" (H.R. 200) is a broad health care reform package which would provide catastrophic and basic health protection, including physical and mental health care, for all Americans. The "Medicare and Medicaid Catastrophic and Acute Transitional Care Act" (H.R. 1930) would better protect the income and assets of spouses of Alzheimer's victims in the Medicaid program and provide limited respite care. The "Home Care Quality Assurance Act" (H.R. 1700) would better protect the quality of home care services provided to beneficiaries under certain federal programs. "The Medicare Long-Term Home Care Catastrophic Protection Act" (H.R. 3436/2762; introduced with Representative Pepper) would provide long-term home care protection for Medicare beneficiaries and chronically ill children.

DEWEY KNIGHT: RETIREMENT OF A PUBLIC MAN

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I have been in public life for almost 25 years. During that time, I have known and worked with many dedicated, intelligent public employees. A few were truly outstanding. This is the best way to describe Dewey Knight, who is retiring after 30 years of service to Dade County.

Dewey Knight is a special man with special talents. He is a leader, a teacher, a decisionmaker, and a doer. He possesses an intuitive feel for government and for our dynamic, complex Dade County community, and the presence and personality that commands respect as well as friendship.

"When the going gets tough, the tough get going" is the old cliche. In Dade County, when the going got tough, the tough got in touch with Dewey Knight. Over the years, throughout periodic crises, he brought stability and good sense to many difficult situations.

I want to share with my colleagues some recent news stories about the retirement—or rather the transition in life—of my special friend, Dewey Knight.

The news stories follow:

METRO'S DEWEY KNIGHT RETIRES—MAN TO CALL IN A CRISIS FOR 30 YEARS

(By Craig Gemoules)

Dewey Knight went on a grapefruit diet to get his first job with Dade County.

Eighty pounds overweight, with a blood pressure of 180 over 110, he had flunked the first physical exam. Three months later, he tried again—and began a 30-year career that led him to become the highest ranking black in county government.

He has counseled troubled children, helped the poor live easier, brought housing to those who can't afford it and opened employment for countless minorities. His colleagues say he is a champion of the downtrodden, a beacon for the disillusioned.

"Dewey always stands there as a bastion, as clarion, and says, 'Don't forget the little people,'" said Tony Ojeda, an assistant county manager and friend of 14 years.

Knight, 53, retires today as deputy county manager. He was Dade's first black department director, first black assistant county manager, first black deputy county manager and first black interim county manager.

As a youngster, he had wanted to be an insurance executive. When he joined the Air Force and was assigned a counseling job, he discovered the field of human resources—and forgot about insurance. Throughout his career at the county, he has tried to demur as bosses gave him more and more authority and moved him further and further up the bureaucracy.

Friends later said this lack of self-promotion helped him gain trust, because colleagues could see he wasn't out for personal gain.

He was promoted nonetheless. Today, Knight is second-in-charge of the largest government in the southeastern United States.

His reputation for fairness, as well the compassion he showed for the people he was hired to help, have led his bosses to pick Knight for some of the county's most controversial jobs. Throughout his career, he has been placed squarely in the face of trouble: He was supervisor of a youth counseling service under study by a grand jury; head of a welfare department under siege by protesters; in charge of housing and human services in the wake of riots; replacement for county managers who quit or found themselves under investigation.

"Whenever this government is in crisis, he's the guy they call," said Jesse McCrary, an attorney who befriended Knight 25 years ago.

Knight's office is now filled with boxes, but he has barely begun to pack. "Everything I pick up, it brings back nostalgia," he said. "This is the hardest thing I've had to do."

Knight has been with Metro almost as long as there has been a Metro. The county government was chartered a year before he arrived from Connecticut and took a job as a caseworker in the Kendall Children's Home.

The legacy he hopes to leave is an enduring sensitivity for those people who need government the most: the poor, the elderly, the ill.

He does not wish to be remembered as the man who wouldn't be manager, although he probably will. County commissioners have flat-out offered him the job, even begged him to take it.

Current manager Joaquin Avino once publicly offered to step aside if Knight wanted his job. Avino said his offer was serious.

Three times commissioners called upon Knight to run the county: when manager Ray Goode resigned, when Sergio Pereira was under investigation and again when Pereira resigned. The politics and the pressure convinced Knight he never wanted to make the promotion permanent.

"There's as many differences as day and night across that threshold. . . . It was seven days a week, 24 hours a day. It took its toll on me emotionally, physically."

Knight has had to cope with his own tragedies. His father and grandfather died within days of each other in the spring of 1971. On what would be the final trip to see his grandfather, Knight had a car crash. He injured his shoulder, knocking a seat out of the way so he could rescue his wife and two sons. The car burst into flames moments after the family was clear.

Slightly more than a year ago, Knight's wife, Clara, died of cancer. As did her husband, she devoted her life in helping others. She was an elementary school counselor, who used her own money to buy clothes and shoes for children who attended the all-black school.

The couple never moved from their modest home in Liberty City, although friends said they certainly could have afforded to if they chose.

Knight's first county job, at the Kendall Children's home, paid $8,944 a year. As deputy manager, Knight today earns $110,000 a year.

He is not ready to retire completely and has had lengthy discussions with McCrary about a private sector job. Neither will say just what job that will be, although Knight said it will entail lobbying the Metro Commission.

It will be part time, and then only when Knight is done relaxing. His secretary of 22 years, Bonnie Burrell, bought him a fishing pole for Christmas.

"He's had some fantastic offers," McCrary said, "But the guy's soul still remains in helping people. I think he's going to end up doing just what he's been doing."

30 YEARS OF CARING

When Metro employees return to work today after a long holiday weekend, they'll find something changed at the Government Center. Dewey Knight, the much-loved deputy county manager, will not be in his 29th-floor office. He retired on Friday after 30 years of selfless service to Dade's residents.

Sure, the sun still will set beautifully over the Everglades, and the tides still will lap regularly upon the beaches. But things won't be the same. Part of Dade's firmament won't be there any more.

Mr. Knight's presence in the county's administration was comforting. Successive county managers and commissioners alike trusted his wise counsel and ability to handle crises. Children, the elderly, the handicapped, and the needy depended on his advocacy of their cause. His first county job was as a social worker, and he remained one for three decades.

Black Dade Countians took particular solace in Mr. Knight's being in such a powerful decision-making position. It is important that his leaving not detract from the county's commitment to representative government and concern for the downtrodden.

Mr. Knight, 58, was the county's first black deputy manager. Created for him, that position recognized his broad experience and personable management style. He also was Dade's first black department head, first black assistant county manager, a responsibility thrust upon him three times. He could have been county manager three times, but he declined. He saw it as a never-ending job that, in his stints as interim manager, took its toll on him physically and emotionally.

Mr. Knight will continue serving on the United Way's board of directors and on a committee studying Dade's homeless. But he'll take some time off first to fish with his two sons, and to play golf, before throwing himself into another job. If Dade is really lucky, that new endeavor will allow him to do what he does so well: advocate for the little people who need help. Thank you, Dewey Knight, for 30 years of caring.

THE DEGRADATION OF HEALTH CARE IN THE UNITED STATES

HON. JIM BATES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw my colleagues' attention to a column written by Dr. Fred A. Baughman, Jr., that recently appeared in the San Diego Union. In this article, Dr. Baughman discusses several problems with our current medical care system. I recommend the following article to my colleagues:

THE DEGRADATION OF HEALTH CARE—U.S.A.

I am saddened and angered at the day-to-day degradation of our health care mission. I am a physician who has been in private practice for 25 years. I have been a hospital chief of staff. I have labored, and even battled, for quality assurance in many capacities. Access to, and the quality of, medical care are more and more difficult to assure in today's "medical marketplace". I would be remiss if I didn't speak out.

In 1986 there was two billion dollars worth of over-prescribing in the Medicare program, with 800,000 unnecessary hospital admissions. We hear Dr. William L. Roper, of the Health Care Financing Administration, lament his inability to control the heightening "intensity" and "volume" of physician prescribing. It would be bad enough if this were just a monetary dilemma but more reprehensible is that much of this money-seeking, unnecessary, prescribing of medical and surgical tests and therapies results in injury and death. There is the wide perception that such is the case in coronary bypass surgery today. Supernumerary, low volume bypass surgery programs, with suboptimal outcomes, are established and perpetuated for competitive economic reasons. In California it is estimated that 30 lives and 16 million dollars per year could be saved if coronary bypass surgery was done only in hospitals doing more than 200 per year.

In 1984, 103,000 "stroke-preventive" carotid endarterectomies were done, half of them on asymptomatic (normal appearing, normal feeling) people. The operative death rate overall was 2.8%, greater than if none of them had surgery. Dr. Mark Dyken, Chairman of the Section on Stroke of the American Heart Association, estimated that 3,808 to 11,560 unnecessary strokes or deaths resulted. In England carotid surgery is done on 20/million; in the United States 433/million! Who's people are better served?

In an article entitled "Death by Pulmonary Artery Flow Directed Catheter", Professor Eugene Robin, of Stanford, said that data suggests "thousands have died and are dying" due to this widely employed diagnostic tool in the management of acute myocardial infarction (heart attack). He called for a moratorium.

Seventeen to 28% of the 500,000 coronary arteriograms done each year have been deemed inappropriate. "C" section deliveries rose from 9.1% in 1974 to 24.1% in 1986. Finally, there is the widely held perception of abuse of hysterectomy, cataract surgery and cardiac pacemakers.

Given patient-directed quality assurance on the one hand and "restraint of trade" on the other, in today's "medical marketplace" it is "no contest". There has been a pervasive retreat from Hippocratic principles as the reins of medical care have been ceded to marketplace forces, both by the A.M.A. and health care politicians of the '70's and '80's.

The "business" of medical practice was simple and took care of itself very nicely when there were no areas of physician glut, as was the case in grand Rapids, Michigan, where I first practiced from 1964 to 1975. Medical practice there was patient-directed, quality-assured, superb. The profession was still grand; it had no need for a huge entrepreneurial superstructure, to be paid for out of the pockets of patients, as is now the case. There was no medical-industrial complex then, with deans moving on to positions or boards of the health care corporate giants; there were no health care corporate giants then.

It was Dr. Robert Petersdorf, formerly dean of our medical school here in San Diego, now President of the Association of American Medical Colleges, the fraternity of deans, who warned in 1983 that the profession would cannibalize itself if the "physician glut" was not addressed. His silence on the issue since assuming leadership of the A.A.M.C. has been duly noted.

In the "whitewash" article by Schwartz in the New England Journal of Medicine early this year, saying "there is no physician glut" and that the physician/populace ratio is "just fine from now to the year 2000", there was one word that Dr. Schwartz omitted that he and the leadership of American medicine studiously avoid and that is "maldistribution".

Physicians, myself among them, are a species that aggregate in places where most people would like to live but can't always afford. Thus, while there are 418 physicians per 100,000 populace in Marin County; 627 per 100,000 in San Francisco County; 607/100,000 in Washington, D.C.; 318/100,000 in New York State, and 325/100,000 in Massachusetts, while most authorities on medical manpower accept that an optimal ratio is 120/100,000, there are just 24 per 100,000 in relatively undesirable East Los Angeles and there are over 1,500 counties nation-wide that are deemed to be under-served. All this is to say nothing of the 37 million working poor in the United States without health care insurance, or the cruel defacto rationing that mounts by the fiscal quarter, as even those who can afford health care insurance are forced into ever more restrictive pre-paid health plans. An insurance agent friend of mine told me the other day that his own health insurance premium had gone up 40% at the start of the year. How many more millions uninsured does this translate to?

Too many doctors, living where they want to live, saying what they must, and then doing what they must to patients in order to generate a living, is what is breaking the bank of medical care, and at the same time making medical care palpably more injurious and deadly. These are grievous charges because these are grievous developments. Do we need more ethics courses in our medical schools? More ethicists? Do we need universal health insurance? Can we afford it? The answer is that our glut and dearth, money-driven health care system is neither fiscally affordable nor health-directed and must be fundamentally changed.

Seats in the not-for-profit, tax-supported, medical schools should be allocated to candidates from all the population centers or areas of each state. Requirements to serve those areas should then be enforced by contract, for however many years it would take to assure an appropriate level of physician staffing in that area. The for-profit, mostly off-shore medical schools, all of dubious quality, should have no role in the health care future of our country.

The medical schools of our country were established state-by-state, supported and maintained as a public health function of government. Such staffing for the care of our citizens nation-wide can no longer be left to whim. Basic health care should be a right, not just a slogan. In this, the greatest of nations, it is a disgrace that it is not. Those who argue that the physicians' freedom of enterprise would thus be abridged need reminding that physicians are not "of the marketplace", that their education and training have been largely tax supported. The societal costs of the education of a physician are estimated to be $400,000 to $500,000. It is only in recent years that the federal government, as an austerity measure, has cut its support of medical schools, leading to an unconscionable rise in tuitions. Canada, our neighbor to the north, does not hesitate to exercise its public health responsibility by augmenting or cutting back to ensure appropriate physician/populace ratios from area to area. America's medical leadership, the A.M.A. and the A.A.M.C., are aware of all of this. They have overseen it. They have refused to accept what it was leading to. At this juncture, I no longer accept that our politician-shapers of health care policy are naive. It is long past time that they stopped doing the expedient thing and undertook to assure accessible, quality health care for all. It can be had, and it can be affordable.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION IMPOSING ADDITIONAL RESTRICTIONS ON TAX-EXEMPT BONDS USED TO PROVIDE RESIDENTIAL RENTAL PROPERTY

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today to impose additional limitations on the use of tax-exempt bonds providing residential rental property. The Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 contained an important restriction in this area—an amendment which I offered to the legislation in the Committee on Ways and Means—and this legislation takes the next logical step.

Mr. Speaker, the privilege of State and local governments to use tax-exempt financing is a benefit which is granted by Congress. As such, Congress has an interest in insuring that tax-exempt bonds are not used in a manner contrary to the intent of Congress. And when State and local governments use bonds to provide housing serving a more affluent class of individuals than other developers are able to do, Congress has a responsibility to step in. The taxpayers of this country do not want to subsidize luxury apartments, elderly housing serving the wealthiest of senior citizens, and nursing homes which refuse to care for those who are unable to pay. Unfortunately, unless Congress acts, those abuses will continue to occur.

As an example, an article in the September 26, 1988, edition of City and State newspaper described how tax-exempt bonds could be used by local governments to finance construction of moderate income housing while avoiding restrictions in the tax laws. The government agency could also receive income from the project, according to the article. Now, this approach seems somewhat meritorious, unless one considers the need for housing for the homeless and the poor. Serving truly the middle class is also meritorious; the problem comes when multifamily housing complexes begin to look more and more like luxury condominiums and less and less like housing serving a truly legitimate governmental purpose. Nursing homes and continuing care retirement communities also use tax-exempt financing; many also ignore their responsibility to serve the poor and near-poor.

As a result, I am introducing this legislation today as a means of generating discussion on the proper approach to take to resolve these questions. Last year's tax legislation took an important first step, and this legislation goes one step further. A more detailed description of the legislation follows.

PRESENT LAW

Interest on obligations of State and local governments is exempt from tax under authority of section 103 of the Internal Revenue Code. In the case of bonds used to finance private activities, interest is taxable unless a specific Code provision operates to exclude the interest from taxation.

An example of a private activity bond where interest is tax-exempt are bonds used to finance residential rental property. In the case of residential rental property, the facility must serve a specified percentage of low-income residents by meeting one of two tests. The first test is met if 20% of the units are occupied by individuals with income of 50% or less of the area median income. The second test is met if 40% of the units are occupied by individuals with income of 60% or less of the area median income.

When the proceeds of a bond inure to the benefit of tax-exempt (i.e., 501(c)(3)) organizations, housing operated by those entities was, prior to the 1988 Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988, generally not subject to the income targeting requirements discussed above.

The Code's arbitrage provisions generally deny tax-exempt status to bonds where the proceeds of the issue are used to acquire higher yielding investments, including investment property. Prior to enactment of the 1988 Act, it was unclear whether rental property acquired outside of an issuer's jurisdiction was investment property within the meaning of the Code's arbitrage provisions.

The 1988 act

The Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 (P.L. 100-647) generally extended the low-income targeting provisions, discussed above, to housing provided by 501(c)(3) bonds. Under the provisions of the 1988 Act, any existing housing acquired with the proceeds of a 501(c)(3) bond must satisfy either the "20-50" test or the "40-60" test, discussed above. The 1988 Act did not require new facilities acquired with the proceeds of a 501(c)(3) bond to meet the low-income targeting requirements. Under the 1988 Act, it is unclear whether property initially financed with taxable debt or equity and later refinanced with tax-exempt debt is considered "existing" property.

In addition, the 1988 Act provided that residential rental property financed with tax-exempt bond proceeds outside of the issuer's jurisdiction is investment property for purposes of the Code's arbitrage provisions. For purposes of this provision, "outside of the issuer's jurisdiction" means the area beyond which the issuer exercises sovereign powers (i.e., the taxing power and the power of eminent domain).

The provisions of the 1988 Act were generally effective for bonds issued after October 21, 1988.

EXPLANATION OF PROPOSAL

The legislation contains three main provisions. First, the legislation clarifies that if housing is financed by sources other than tax-exempt debt and is later re-financed with tax-exempt bonds, the facility is not considered "existing" housing for purposes of the 1988 Act if: (1) there was a reasonable expectation that the facility would be so refinanced and (2) the facility was in fact so re-financed within a reasonable period. The provision is effective as if included in the 1988 Act.

Residential rental property provided by 501(c)(3) bonds

The bill extends the low-income targeting rules of present law (as modified by the 1988 Act) to all housing provided by 501(c)(3) bonds. Thus, regardless of whether the housing is existing or whether the first use of the facility begins with the 501(c)(3) organization, either the "20-50" test or the "40-60" test must be met.

This additional restriction does not apply, however, if the bond is issued by a general purpose governmental unit and is secured by the full faith and credit of the issuer. For this exemption to apply, the housing must be new housing, or housing which is substantially rehabilitated (within the meaning of Code section 48(g)(1)(C)).

The legislation makes clear that continuing care retirement communities (within the meaning of Code section 7872(g)(4), which provides an exception from the imputed interest rules for these facilities) are considered housing for purposes of this provision. Thus, these facilities are required to meet the low-income targeting requirements, as are nursing homes, if they are financed with qualified 501(c)(3) bonds.

Arbitrage provisions

The legislation provides that residential rental property located within the jurisdiction of the issuer is investment-type property for purposes of the Code's arbitrage provisions unless the facility meets the low-income targeting requirements or unless the bond is issued by a general purpose governmental unit secured by the full faith and credit of the issuer.

This investment-type property would be treated as a nonpurpose investment. Thus, except during permitted temporary periods or when invested as part of a reasonably required reserve or replacement fund, the yield restrictions applicable to nonpurpose investments apply to investments in this property. Similarly, all arbitrage earnings must be rebated to the Federal government.

The provisions do not apply to private activity bonds or to property which is acquired to implement a court ordered or approved desegregation plan for housing. As under the 1988 Act, the issuer's jurisdiction is the area in which the issuer exercises sovereign powers such as the power of taxation and the power of eminent domain.

EFFECTIVE DATE

The legislation is effective for bonds issued after January 3, 1989. A transitional exception is provided for property where construction, reconstruction or rehabilitation of the facility began before that date (or where a binding contract to incur significant expenditures for these purposes was executed before that date) and was completed after January 3, 1989. In addition, the facility must have been described in an inducement resolution or other similar document before that date. Under the transitional exception, bonds must be issued by December 31, 1991, and the facility must be placed in service by December 31, 1992.

Let me say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that I am aware of the sensitivity with using today as the effective date of this legislation. In the past, however, I have discovered that a delayed effective date often has the effect of a rush to the bond markets which I hope to avoid by choosing this January 3 date.

THE LOCAL RAIL SERVICE REAUTHORIZING ACT

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to reauthorize the Local Rail Service Assistance [LRSA] Program, a little-known initiative that has helped to preserve freight rail service to local communities throughout the country.

Since 1973, the Local Rail Service Assistance Program has built an impressive record of helping States fight rail-line abandonments. In my home State of Oregon and nationwide, the program has literally saved the day for many shippers and communities, urban and rural, small and large.

Often, communities faced with abandonments or line sales are highly dependent on rail service. Loss of that service can have a devastating effect on local economies by shutting down businesses and throwing workers out of jobs.

The LRSA Program addresses this problem by promoting the rehabilitation of rail lines that have fallen into disrepair due to years of deferred maintenance. The program provides grants on a matching basis to States for rail-line rehabilitation, acquisition, and construction projects as alternatives to abandonment. It also makes funds available to the States for rail-planning efforts. Frequently, LRSA funds are used to help new short-line railroads complete the rehabilitation work needed to make those lines economically viable.

The need for the LRSA Program is clear. Branch-line abandonments, caused by the ongoing consolidation of the railroad industry, continue to threaten local communities with loss of rail service. A 1987 GAO report found that nearly 40,000 miles of track were approved for abandonment between 1970 and 1985. According to estimates, more than 14,000 miles of track have been abandoned in the last 5 years alone.

Since 1980, five railroads in my home State of Oregon have been assisted through 15 projects funded partly by the LRSA Program. Approximately $3 million in Federal funds and $1.3 million in local matching funds have gone into the improvements. Without LRSA assistance, these five lines probably would have been abandoned. Industries served by the rail lines would have cut back operations due to the loss of their rail-served markets, causing an estimated 1,800 layoffs, affecting 3,700 secondary jobs, and resulting in an annual payroll loss of $85 million. The Oregon Department of Transportation has identified a half dozen rail lines in the State still in need of similar assistance.

The legislation I am introducing today would reauthorize the LRSA Program at $10 million in fiscal year 1989 and at $30 million per year in fiscal years 1990 and 1991. The bill provides a 70-percent Federal match for rail-line rehabilitation projects, and a 50-percent match for all other projects.

I am pleased to be joined in introducing this legislation by Mr. FLORIO, Mr. SLATTERY, Mr. TAUKE, Mr. TIM JOHNSON, and Mr. NAGLE. In addition, Senator TOM HARKIN of Iowa, a strong advocate of the LRSA Program, plans to introduce similar legislation in the Senate.

The LRSA Program is a vital means for preserving jobs and economic vitality in communities dependent on rail service. I would urge my colleagues to join in support of this legislation.

ANTI-DRUG ACT OF 1989

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, there is no greater threat to our national security than drugs—threatening our Nation's youth, strength, and stability from within our borders, although most of the drugs originate elsewhere in the world.

We are living in a nation that is plagued by a drug epidemic. Drugs are eating away at the national fabric of American life. Pilots, train engineers, bus drivers, doctors, lawyers, nurses, schoolchildren—everyone is affected. The United States has a national emergency and we must treat it as such by declaring a war on drugs.

The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration [DEA], the U.S. Customs Service, the U.S. Coast Guard, and our local and State police are trying to stem the flood of illicit drugs into this country, but the statistics make one fact clear: If they caught every car and truck trying to smuggle dope into the country, if they caught every airline and shipline passenger trying to smuggle dope into this country, they would stop only 30 percent of the cocaine and only 12 percent of the marijuana.

The hard, cold fact is that we're up against highly sophisticated, well-organized industries whose sole service is the delivery of illicit drugs into our country. The profit is so great and the risk of detection and capture is relatively so small that our outmanned drug-stopping forces are falling further and further behind.

Last year Congress passed a comprehensive drug bill that made great strides by both enhancing antidrug law enforcement and expanding prevention and treatment programs. The new law increased appropriations for a number of Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies targeting drug enforcement programs.

These measures which I have repeatedly supported are positive steps for us as a country to have taken in order to have a chance against what has become our most serious crime problem, our fastest rising health problem, and one of the greatest threats to our national security.

But we need a stronger front line against drugs—the muscle at our borders and along our coastline to stop cocaine, marijuana, heroin, and the other drugs that are sapping our human and financial resources.

There is no question that we are losing the war on drugs. And there is no question that it is a war—a war for our citizens' safety, for our economy, our health, and our young people's minds.

That is why I have reintroduced the "War on Drug Smuggling Act" to commit the best of America's Armed Forces and defense technology—radar, aircraft, and ships—for the national battle to end the importation of drugs across our borders.

My bill would expand the role of our military in the war on international drug trafficking by enabling the heads of the major Federal drug enforcement agencies—the Drug Enforcement Agency, the Customs Service, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the Federal Aviation Administration—to call upon the Secretary of Defense to provide military equipment and trained personnel to operate and maintain the equipment to assist in halting drug smugglers.

The law enforcement agency head would make an initial determination of the equipment necessary to detect and interdict the unlawful transport of controlled substances across the border and would then consult with the Defense Department. The Secretary of Defense could decline or modify the request if necessary to preserve military preparedness; but the Secretary would have to make such a finding. In the past, the Defense Department has resisted using its discretionary authority to provide this kind of assistance. My bill would direct the Secretary to provide it upon request, subject to military preparedness requirements.

The measure would also require the heads of the specific Federal law enforcement agencies to meet with the Secretary of Defense, or a designee, and the National Guard Bureau to develop a strategy for: First, one the detection of the unlawful transport of any controlled substance across the international boundaries of the United States; second, the interdiction in the United States of such unlawful transport; and third, the coordination of the efforts of the special law enforcement agencies, the Department of Defense, and the appropriate components of the National Guard in such detection and interdiction.

The Secretary of Defense is directed to invite the chief law enforcement official of each State to attend and participate in any such strategy meeting. "State" is defined as any of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

Laws presently exist which permit the Secretary of Defense to make available any equipment, base facility, or research facility of the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps to any civilian law enforcement official for law enforcement purposes. The Secretary of Defense may also assign members of the above to train Federal, State, and local civilian law enforcement officials in the operation and maintenance of loaned equipment and to provide relevant expert advice. However, Federal law requires the Secretary of Defense to issue regulations to insure that the provision of any assistance does not include direct participation by a member of the Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps in an interdiction of a vessel or aircraft or in a search, seizure, arrest, or other similar activity, unless such activity is otherwise authorized by law.

My bill would direct the Department of Defense to provide the equipment and personnel and would allow their direct involvement in the interdiction process, but it would in no way change current U.S. law which prohibits our armed forces from performing any law enforcement activity.

Every fact tells us that we're fighting a war. We have the best military in the world. We need it on our side in this war, because we can't win without it.

ECONOMIC EQUITY FOR AMERICA'S WORKING POOR

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1989, to bring economic equity to low-wage workers. It has been 8 years since the Federal minimum wage was raised to the current level of $3.35 an hour. Since that time the cost of living has risen more than 30 percent. Thus in today's dollars, the current minimum wage is worth only $2.56. My bill will begin to restore the purchasing power of the Federal minimum wage by providing for 3 incremental wage rate increases to $4.65 by 1992.

Raising the minimum wage is also a matter of basic human dignity. If a person is hungry, he or she should be able to provide themselves with a decent meal. If a person is homeless, he or she should be able to provide themselves and their families with decent and adequate shelter.

Increasing the minimum wage is a matter of fundamental economic justice. This bill seeks to continue the national policy established more than 50 years ago of insuring a fair day's pay for a fair day's work. Its purpose is to restore a floor under wages. Its objective is the maintenance of the minimum standard of living necessary for health, efficiency, and general well-being of workers.

My proposal not only provides for incremental increases in the minimum wage, it also incorporates provisions adopted last year by the Committee on Education and Labor. Specifically, the bill provides for an increase in the so-called small business exemption from the current $362,500 to $500,000 of annual sales or business. In addition, the current 40 percent tip credit provision in the FLSA is raised to 45 percent a year after enactment, and to 50 percent the following year and thereafter. These provisions represent a substantial compromise in addressing the concerns of small businesses. Suffice it to say, there is no further necessity to modify or revise the bill which I am introducing.

A final provision creates a 5 member Minimum Wage Review Board to recommend future adjustments to the Congress. Every 2 years the Board would review current economic data and submit to the Congress a recommendation for a minimum wage adjustment to become effective in the following year, with an estimate of the economic impact of implementing such an adjustment. The provision is not self-executing, nor is the Congress required to take any action. The recommendation is merely advisory.

The provision was included to generate a serious dialog on how to keep the issue of the minimum wage before the Congress in a systematic manner. It provides for periodic, objective scrutiny of economic conditions on which to base reasoned judgments as to whether or not adjustments should be made in the minimum wage. It requires this information to be transmitted to the Congress on a regular basis, but does not mandate a change in the wage rate. I think the concept has significant merit. I hope it will receive serious consideration.

A brief summary of the bill follows:

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS AMENDMENTS OF 1989—SUMMARY

Sec. 1. Short Title.

Sec. 2. Minimum Wage Increase. Amends Section 6(a) of the Fair Labor Standards Act to provide the following minimum wage rates:

January 1, 1990—not less than $3.85 an hour;

January 1, 1991—not less than $4.25 an hour;

January 1, 1992—not less than $4.65 an hour.

Adjustment. During the 90-day period beginning January 1, 1994, a newly established Minimum Wage Review Board shall review current economic data and determine the amount by which the minimum wage rate should be adjusted to reflect changes in wages and prices since the last adjustment. Not later than October 1, 1994, the Board shall transmit to the Congress a recommendation of a minimum wage rate to be placed into effect on January 1, 1995. The recommendation shall include an estimate of the economic effects of placing the wage rate into effect. The process would be repeated every two years.

Establishes a Minimum Wage Review Board consisting of 5 members. The Chair of the Board would be appointed by the President; the remaining 5 members would be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, based on recommendations from the majority and minority leaders of each House of Congress respectively.

Sec. 3. Change in Enterprise Test.

Effective January 1, 1989, Section 3(s) of the Fair Labor Standards Act is amended to exempt from the Act's coverage retail and service establishments with less than $500,000 in annual gross volume of sales or business.

Sec. 4. Tip Credit.

Section 3(m) of the Fair Labor Standards Act is amended to provide that effective January 1, 1990, the current "tip credit" is increased from 40 percent to 45 percent. Effective January 1, 1991, and thereafter, the "tip credit" is raised to 50 percent.

BILLS INTRODUCED TO IMPROVE LIFE FOR OLDER AMERICANS

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform the House that I am reintroducing several bills that will make life better for millions of Medicare patients. In particular, I am introducing four bills that concentrate on the detection and treatment of breast cancer, provide long-term care services for all senior citizens, and to provide Medicare coverage for seniors who need hearing, dental, and vision services.

Mr. Speaker, breast cancer is an insidious disease that is predicted to take the life of at least 42,000 American women in 1989. In addition, the National Cancer Institute estimates that breast cancer will strike at least 1 woman out of every 10 some time in their lives. However, perhaps the most frustrating aspect of this problem is that while early detection is technologically feasible, it is not affordable for most American women. The Office of Technology Assessment has estimated that the cost of a standard mammogram to be approximately $100. Most older women—19 percent of whom receive an average of only $421 of Social Security benefits per month—must make a decision to spend as much as one-fourth of their monthly income on a needed medical procedure, or to pay the rent.

As a result, I have reintroduced H.R. 2935, a bill of mine from the 100th Congress, that will provide Medicare coverage for annual mammographic screenings for all women covered by Medicare. While I recognize that passage of the Medicare catastrophic prevention bill last year provide for coverage of mammograms, it is still considered medically insufficient to cover the true needs of older women. My bill proposes to provide annual coverage—the medically recommended coverage—instead of the biannual coverage passed in the Medicare catastrophic bill.

In addition, I have reintroduced H.R. 671 from the 100th Congress. This bill will ensure proper treatment of breast cancer by all doctors who receive Medicare payments for the services they provide to older Americans. Specifically, this bill calls for the proper amount and quality of treatment information to be made available for all breast cancer patients. American women need to know that the old days of radical treatments as the cure for every case of breast cancer are gone and that alternative treatments are available which do not disfigure or cost as much for the American taxpayer. Passage of this bill will mean nothing more difficult for doctors than providing a booklet from a respected breast cancer organization that explains the types of options and their applicability as well as their advantages and disadvantages. This is a humane and sensible idea who's time has come.

Mr. Speaker, I am also reintroducing H.R. 679 from the last Congress. This bill is a true comprehensive long-term care bill that covers all the needs of our senior citizens. My bill will cover nursing home costs, congregate home services, community-based mental health care, homemaking or home-help services, and adult day care or day hospital services. As we all witnessed last Congress, long-term care is an issue that requires immediate attention by the Congress. The American people want long-term care services from the Government and they have stated overwhelmingly that they are willing to pay for them. I strongly urge the Congress to consider this important bill.

The fourth bill I am reintroducing is H.R. 678, a bill to provide Medicare coverage for certain vision, dental, and hearing services. This bill will provide coverage for vision, hearing, and dental examinations as well as all needs regarding the acquisition of eyeglasses, hearing aids, dentures, and other dental needs. As all older Americans know, the cost of these services can be an enormous expense that requires them to make painful choices regarding their limited incomes. My legislation will enable all older Americans to live more enjoyable lives.

Mr. Speaker, I believe all of us in this Chamber have the desire to improve life for older Americans. I am hopeful that the 101st Congress will prove to be a watershed for aging issues in general, but for improvements in the Medicare system in particular. The passage of my four bills will help all older Americans and I ask that the Members of the historic 101st Congress consider these bills as soon as possible.

A TRIBUTE TO DANNY AND NATALIE HILLER

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding couple, Danny and Natalie Hiller, who are being honored by the Young Israel of Hillcrest at its annual dinner on January 15. Over the years the Hillers have distinguished themselves by their tireless service to the Hillcrest community and their loving commitment to their four children, Lauren, Jordan, Suzanne, and Jared.

Danny Hiller first made an impression upon the congregation as Ba'al Koreh, chanter of the Torah, from 1968 to 1982. He still conducts a Shabbat morning class for the future Ba'alei Koreh to be found among our youth. Danny subsequently rose through the ranks to become president of Young Israel of Hillcrest for 3 years, a length of time exceeded only by his father, Leonard Hiller. Danny's terms in office were characterized by outstanding programming and generous charitable endeavors. Among his many chairmanships were Yom Hashoa Commemoration, United Jewish Appeal, Israel Bond and Journal Dinner, and cochairman of the Sifrei Torah Fund. On a communal level he has been, for the past 3 years, financial secretary for National Council of Young Israel, serving twice as both dinner chairman and convention chairman for National Council. Danny Hiller is also presently a member of Queens Cabinet for United Jewish Appeal and member of the Board of Yeshiva of Central Queens.

Natalie Hiller, who for 2 years served as co-president of Sisterhood, is this year flying solo as president of the Young Israel of Hillcrest Sisterhood. She has given her splendid talents to the beautification of the synagogue, both physically and spiritually. Her innovative programming and inspirational leadership have been evident in the wonderful success enjoyed by Sisterhood. Amazingly, Natalie has never sacrificed her role as a loving and supportive mother and wife.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me in wishing Danny and Natalie Hiller many more years of happiness and success.

THE SMOKING AND HEALTH ADVERTISING ACT OF 1989

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I am today reintroducing legislation to add to the vigor of the campaign to educate the public about the hazardous effects of cigarette smoking. "The Smoking and Health Advertising Act of 1989" would require tobacco companies to spend an amount equal or greater to 5 percent of their advertising and promotional budget on public health messages detailing the hazardous effects of smoking.

Specifically, this bill amends the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to disallow the deduction for advertising or other promotion expenses with respect to the sales of tobacco products unless the taxpayer—the tobacco companies—pays for the specified amount of advertising on the health effects of smoking. All advertisements would be prepared by, or approved by the Secretary of Health and Human Services [HHS] so as to assure their quality.

I strongly believe that this legislation is a fair way to ensure that critical funding is provided for public health advertising without increasing our huge Federal deficit. To those of my colleagues who may question this approach, let me remind you that requiring the tobacco industry to sponsor health messages is not a new concept. Since 1965, Congress has enacted legislation requiring the tobacco industry to print health warnings on cigarette packs and advertisements. And in 1984, Congress enacted the Comprehensive Smoking Act, which requires cigarette companies to print detailed descriptions—on cigarette packs and advertisements—of the hazardous effects of smoking.

It is critical that we take these measures now to strengthen the public health campaign on smoking. According to the Surgeon General, 350,000 people die of smoking related illnesses each year. The tragedy is these premature deaths could be prevented. Despite overwhelming evidence that cigarette smoking is a grave health hazard, people continue to smoke and young children continue to initiate the deadly habit. No other product in the United States is harmful when used properly.

Encouraging new smokers, especially children, women, and minorities, has become increasingly important for the tobacco industry as more and more smokers either quit, or die of smoking related causes. Roughly 2.5 million Americans must start smoking each year to maintain the size of the smoking population.

Unfortunately, the decision to smoke is usually made at an age when peer pressure eclipses rational, educated decision making. Studies show that 22 percent of all smokers start smoking before they are 9 years old, 60 percent before they are 14 years old, and 90 percent begin to smoke before the age of 21. Though a variety of psychological and sociological factors may influence an individual's decision to smoke, there can be no doubt that the highly visible advertising and promotional campaigns launched by the tobacco industry influence prospective smokers—particularly our young people.

Cigarettes are one of the Nation's most heavily advertised consumer products. In addition to purchasing ads in magazines, newspapers, and on billboards, cigarette companies vie for the public's attention by sponsoring entertainment, cultural, and sporting events.

While the public is bombarded with this prosmoking campaign, antismoking and public health messages are virtually invisible. Numerous studies have indicated that counteradvertising is a highly effective way to discourage smoking; however, the resources to produce, distribute, and most importantly, purchase magazine space or television time are woefully inadequate. The approximately $5 million spent each years on counteradvertising stands in stark contrast to the roughly $2.5 billion spent annually by the tobacco industry on advertising and promotion.

The counteradvertising movement has not always been as weak and poorly financed as it now is. In 1967, the Federal Communications Commission [FCC] ruled that the "Fairness Doctrine"—which at the time was enforced and required that broadcasters afford a reasonable opportunity for the presentation of contrasting viewpoints on controversial issues of public importance—be applied to cigarette advertising on television and radio. If no other private or public source was available to finance the broadcast of opposing views the broadcaster was obliged to air those views free of charge.

A highly visible antismoking campaign was launched as a result of the FCC ruling. At its peak, the Fairness Doctrine antismoking messages received 1 minute of air time for every 3 minutes of smoking advertising. Roughly $200 million in 1970 dollars—in commercial air time was donated to the antismoking campaign.

It is estimated that during the 4 years that the Fairness Doctrine antismoking ads were aired per capita cigarette consumption declined by 10 percent. I believe that this statistic is convincing testimony to the fact that counteradvertising is effective.

Ironically, Congress may have done more harm than good for the antismoking movement when it passed the Public Health Cigarette Smoking Act of 1970, which banned cigarette advertisements from television and radio. When cigarette ads were removed from the broadcast media in 1971, the Fairness Doctrine messages disappeared with them. Shortly thereafter, per capita cigarette consumption rose for the first time in 4 years.

I strongly believe that educating America's young people about the harmful effects of cigarette smoking must be one of our top priorities. Our failure to reach American youth is evidenced by the fact that, according to studies, approximately 40 percent of high school seniors do not believe that there is a great health risk in smoking. It is clear that we must do more to convince young people that smoking can kill them.

The first step we can take is to revitalize the counteradvertising movement. The legislation I have today introduced will do that.

In addition to the "Smoking and Health Advertising Act," I am also today introducing a resolution, expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that the Federal Government should encourage both electronic and print media to air or print more antismoking advertisements as a public service.

Today, we are listening to proposals for slashing vital programs because of our burgeoning Federal debt. This legislation will help reduce the billions of dollars paid by the Federal Government to treat smoking-related illnesses. Each year over $22 billion is spent on health care for smoking related illnesses, including $4.2 billion through Medicare and Medicaid. Though these costs are staggering, they pale in comparison to the emotional price paid by the families and loved ones of the hundreds of thousands who die from smoking-related diseases each year.

It is clear that the time has come for a renewed Federal commitment to eliminating smoking in the United States. I believe the bills I have introduced will go a long way toward this goal by providing a two-tiered approach to bringing information about the hazards of smoking to the American people. We can save money, but more important—we can save lives.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

H. RES. —

Resolution expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that the Federal Government should encourage both electronic and print media to air or print more antismoking ads as a public service

Whereas over 350,000 premature deaths each year are caused by tobacco-related illness;

Whereas 180,000 or more deaths in the United States each year are due to lung cancer which is far more than the number of deaths caused by AIDS or any other disease;

Whereas nonsmokers are at risk as well as smokers as shown in a report by the Surgeon General that an estimated 2,400 lung cancer deaths annually can be attributed to passive smoking;

Whereas smoking related diseases cost the United States health care system an estimated $22,000,000,000 yearly and the Federal Government pays approximately $4,200,000,000 yearly for smoking-related health care;

Whereas a smoke-free society would improve the health and environment of all Americans;

Whereas massive and readily accessible education as to the deadly effects of cigarette smoking may discourage young adults from beginning to smoke and may encourage smokers to stop; and

Whereas television, radio, and magazines are the major forms of communication nationwide: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the Federal Government should strongly encourage both print and electronic media to voluntarily print or air public service messages describing the deadly effects of cigarette smoking and that such an action would be a critical step in protecting the health of all American citizens.

LEO SAUNDERS INSTALLED AS REALTORS PRESIDENT

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I know that all Members of the House will want to join me in congratulating Leo Saunders on the occasion of his installation as president of the California Association of Realtors on January 13.

In addition to being a long-time personal friend of mine and business leader in the bay area, Leo has been extremely active in wide-ranging business, civic, and public service activities for more than two decades.

Leo has been deeply involved in some of the more important issues which face the Contra Costa County community, serving on the Contra Costa Transit Authority, the county transportation committee, the water quality committee and the energy committee. He also has been a leading figure in such diverse community activities as the Little League, the Muscular Dystrophy Association, and the American Cancer Society. He also has taught at Diablo Valley College throughout the past decade.

Never reluctant to voice his views on public issues, Leo also has served as councilman and mayor of Clayton, CA, on the mayors' conference, and the Association of Bay Area Governments.

For nearly two decades, Leo Saunders has been a realtor in Walnut Creek, serving as president of the county realtors board in 1980. He instituted the first mediation program in the State, and was recognized as the Realtor of the Year in 1985. He has previously served as a director of the State association (1974–89), and as regional vice president in 1983.

As president of the California Association of Realtors, Leo will head a 125,000 member trade organization, the largest in the State, and will also serve as the chair of the political affairs committee of the National Association of Realtors.

In addition to these many professional and community activities, I also want to note Leo's willingness to serve as an informal advisor to me on many of the complicated issues facing the housing and development business in our State and nationally. I am grateful to him for his advice and counsel, and am deeply impressed by his extraordinary commitment to the quality of life of our community.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you and the Members of the U.S. House of Representatives join me in congratulating Leo Saunders as he assumes the responsibilities of president of the California Realtors Association, and in wishing him great success during his tenure in that position.

THE FEDERAL MILK MARKETING ORDER REFORM ACT OF 1989

OF WISCONSIN

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, later this month I will introduce legislation to overhaul the Federal milk marketing order system. If we are serious about reducing Federal farm outlays, restoring market competition and ensuring equality of prices for all farmers then we will seriously consider my legislation to reduce the artificial barriers created by the milk marketing order system.

Today, dairy farmers in traditional dairy producing States like Minnesota and Wisconsin receive the lowest prices for their milk in the Nation while those in the South and Southwest get the highest prices. In fact, the gap in prices was further widened in 1985 with the mandated increase in the "Class I" differentials.

Milk marketing orders were established in 1933 to safeguard dairy farmers and consumers from great swings in milk supplies and prices. This was a good approach in 1933 since milk was an extremely perishable, bulky commodity and refrigeration and other preservation technologies were primitive.

In 1989, however, 44 national milk marketing orders provide for cumbersome bureaucracy, unrepresentative transportation allowances and a generally antiquated system that costs the U.S. taxpayer an estimated $800 million a year in waste and income transfer.

Last March, the Government Accounting Office released its findings on the state of the dairy industry. The GAO report concluded that the milk marketing order system is outdated and should be reformed.

In July, the USDA also released its report on the Federal order system. The report concluded that the system could be modified so that it is more competitive and redistributes producer revenues more evenly among the regions. In addition, the report stated that more efficient shipping patterns could be generated and interregional marketing costs reduced.

The normal economic factors of supply and demand play a minimal role in the price farmers receive for their milk. The price per hundredweight is virtually the same throughout the 44 nationwide milk marketing orders, however, a substantial transportation cost is factored into the price. This difference is the result of an antiquated formula based on the cost of transporting fluid milk from Eau Claire, WI. Thus, marketing orders for regions located farthest from the base point in Eau Claire claim the highest prices.

As a first step toward eliminating the inadequacies of the milk marketing order system, I plan to introduce legislation to repeal the 1985 increases in the class I differentials that have caused such large price variances. My bill will also require the USDA to site an additional four to eight basing points throughout the country. The new basing points will be in areas of the country which have a surplus of milk and can readily meet the needs of deficit areas.

Ideally, I would like to see the price of milk left up to the market forces within the various regions and restrictions lifted on the transportation of milk in any form between the regions. However, changes to the Federal order system will take time. In the meantime, I believe that my proposal offers a rational first step toward addressing a major inadequacy in our Nation's dairy policy—discrimination against traditional dairy producing areas.

The 1985 increases in class I differentials were not based on economics, but politics. At a time when efforts were under way to lower milk production nationwide, several regions received financial incentives to produce more milk. These unfair price increases have directly lead to an explosive expansion of milk production in the South and Southwest. In fact, the Ireland-based Masstock company has targeted Georgia to build a 6,000-cow dairy operation complete with a series of processing plants to market the milk.

The development of additional basing points similar to Eau Claire, WI, will help eliminate price discrepancies between the orders and bring an element of fairness back into the system. The price of milk would be determined as it is now; however, the differentials would be scaled back to reflect the actual costs of producing and transporting milk from the new basing point. Rather than single out Minnesota and Wisconsin, my plan recognizes that there are other areas in the United States with high concentrations of milk production which can readily meet any deficit needs of the Southern States.

It is time that we in Congress set aside our regional differences and bring an element of stability back to the dairy industry. A streamlined milk marketing system is long overdue and I urge my colleagues to support my proposal to bring competition and fairness back into the Federal milk marketing order system.

NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT ACT

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, today I join with my colleagues, the gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] in introducing the National Development Investment Act and extension of the programs of the Appalachian Regional Commission. The bill, which extends and modifies the programs under the Economic Development Administration, and continues the ARC programs, is very similar to H.R. 2686 which passed the House on August 6, 1987.

This is the fifth consecutive Congress in which we have introduced this legislation, Each time it has passed with overwhelming bipartisan support—most recently by a margin of 330 to 89 in the 100th Congress. The Senate has never acted on the bill, although we hope that this year will prove the exception.

We introduce the bill today to emphasize our concern for those areas of the country, such as my own district in northeastern Minnesota, which have not fully benefited from the current, favorable economy, and will need continued assistance as they try to diversify their economies and rejoin the Nation's mainstream.

This is not a jobs bill. It is not a short-term or miracle cure for those areas. It is a program for stable, long-term sustained growth and permanent, private sector job creation in the Nation's most economically distressed areas.

It will lay the groundwork for recovery at the local level. Our country's economic strength has always been measured by the soundness of the sum of its parts. This bill addresses the most distressed of those parts, our hardest pressed communities.

Title I of this bill, the National Development Investment Act, would establish a successor agency of the Economic Development Administration [EDA]. The programs are simliar to those under EDA: grants for public capital facilities, loans to small businesess, and technical assistance and planning grants. EDA-eligible recipients: States, economic development districts, units of local government, and Indian tribes, would remain eligible for assistance under the new act. In addition, the new bill also would reach, for the first time, pockets of distress in otherwise prosperous areas.

But we have made changes in EDA's current programs, looking toward the challenges of the 1990's and to institute improvements based on our three decades of experience writing economic development legislation.

First, we tightened the eligibility requirements. But limiting eligibility to areas with unemployment rates 1 percent or more above the national level over the past 2 years, and to areas with a per capita income of 80 percent or less of the national average, we were able to confine eligibility to truly distressed areas.

Of course, areas whose major employer has closed or is about to close its doors, or which are stricken with other sudden and severe economic dislocations, would remain eligible.

We also changed eligibility procedures. Previously, once an area was designated as distressed, it remained permanently eligible for assistance. Under the new legislation, an area must demonstrate distress with every application.

Third, we adapted the application procedures to reflect the real process of economic development. Applicants must, prior to receiving a grant, draw up a comprehensive development investment strategy into which the applied-for project must fit. Gone is the projects-for-projects'-sake approach of the past. Each project would, under our legislation, have to be integrally linked to the area's overall economic problems, and contribute to a comprehensive solution to those problems.

Under the new bill, the Federal matching share would be limited to 50 percent of the project cost, and there would have to be major involvement by the private sector.

The bill includes grants for revolving loan funds, to be administered locally, to make loans to small businesses.

Grants would be limited to $2 million per year for each applicant, with a $1 million per application limit for revolving loan funds.

Our legislation authorizes $250 million for development facilities grants, and $75 million for planning, for fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for the outyears. It is a 3-year bill.

Title II would continue the programs established under the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965, and administered by the Appalachian Regional Commission. It will sustain economic recovery in a major region of America which, like northeastern Minnesota, has not kept pace with the progress of the other parts of this country.

The bill authorizes $39.2 million for economic enhancement grants, and $79.5 million for the highway program, in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for the following 2 years. The non-Federal share is increased to 50 percent for the nonhighway program.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation focuses on the economic development needs of the 1980's and 1990's—on private sector jobs; on small business, which studies have shown to be the major source of jobs; and on repair and rehabilitation of the Nation's deteriorating infrastructure, as well as on construction of new buildings and other public facilities that may be required.

It is a good bill, a sound bill, and a much-needed bill that concentrates assistance on the economic problems of those remaining distressed areas of the country which genuinely need outside assistance.

We would like to add here a brief summary of the bill.

THE NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT SUMMARY

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

Three distress criteria to determine eligibility:

(1) Unemployment: 1% above national average, previous 24 months.

(2) Per capita income: 80% of national average, using latest available statistics.

Only one of the above required to qualify.

Eligibility and grandfathering in current EDA law repealed.

DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT STRATEGY

Cities and counties over 50,000 or pockets of distress within city: do their own planning.

Strategy, in 20 pages or less, includes:

Inventory of community's resources, industries, businesses;

Infrastructure available and needed;

Workforce: skills available;

Land availability;

A showing that nonfederal 50% matching funds are available;

A showing that private sector is willing to invest;

Description of industry/business to be created or expanded;

Description of specific ventures to be funded, e.g.; Revolving loan fund, Employee Stock Ownership Plan, Grant for infrastructure.

FUNDING

Strategy Implementation: authorizes $250 million annually for 3 fiscal years.

Planning and Strategy Department: authorizes $75 million annually for 3 fiscal years.

These are grant, not loan, funds.

$2 million limit of federal funds per strategy: Revolving Loan Fund limited to $1 million.

Subsequent applications must requalify on new showing of distress.

UNITED STATES-ISRAELI FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues some recent correspondence I had with the Department of State and the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative [USTR] regarding allegations the Free Trade Agreement [FTA] had failed to eliminate significant Israeli import barriers against United States goods and that U.S. exporters had not benefited from the FTA.

The replies from the State Department and the USTR provide different perspectives on the FTA but both put criticisms of the FTA into proper context and provide useful information about the FTA and some of its promises as well as problems and challenges.

Attached are a November 22, 1988, Financial Times article on the FTA, my letters to the Department of State and USTR of November 29 and the December 14 USTR reply and the December 21 State Department reply:

UNITED STATES TACKLES WEB OF ISRAELI TRADE BARRIERS

(By Andrew Whitley)

The shock and disbelief among US officials could not have been greater if the altar boy had been caught stealing from the collection after Sunday service.

The offending Israeli document on the table itemising those local goods exempted from purchase tax, to the disadvantage of manufactured imports, ran to 64 pages of single-spaced text. Their value exceeded $1bn. "The Annexe III exemptions were so egregious that they had nothing to say," commented one outraged US participant in a recent round of negotiations in Washington.

Those talks, aimed at thrashing out a long list of US grievances over the way their three-year-old Free Trade Agreement (FTA) with Israel was working, almost broke down on a number of occasions.

Earlier this month the weary negotiators finally initialled a document settling three of the most blatant examples of alleged Israeli "cheating": the purchase tax exemption, an import levy known as Tama, and a ban on the import of US plywood. The first two will be phased out over the next six years, a timetable dictated by the need to comply with the FTA's 1995 deadline for the abolition of all barriers to bilateral trade, while modest quantities of plywood will be allowed in over the coming years under a quota system.

A formidable web of discriminatory non-tariff barriers, harder to tackle because of their vague application, remains to be settled.

Among the weapons at the disposal of protectionist-minded local officials are licensing and standards regulations and an ad hoc customs "uplift" which arbitrarily raises the cost of an imported item for valuation purposes. Significantly, Israel has yet to sign the latest General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade convention on customs valuation practices.

On the question of standards, US officials say they have encountered over a hundred instances of so-called voluntary standards being applied to imports as mandatory, while local manufacturers are subject to much less stringent requirements.

As for the task of extracting an import licence from the labyrinthine Israeli bureaucracy, one European diplomat sourly described the process as "more of an art than a science." It was evident from the start that the FTA with Israel was more of a political gift to a close US ally than a genuine attempt to promote the balanced growth of two-way trade.

But what has upset the Special Trade Representative's office lately is the way in which Israeli exporters are clearly benefitting much more than their US counterparts.

While US imports of Israeli goods have climbed by over half to $2.6bn since the agreement was negotiated in 1984, its exports to Israel last year are up by barely 7 per cent over the same period. At the same time, the US share of the Israeli market has declined significantly compared with that of its main competitor, the European Community.

Between 1985 and 1987 the US market presence went down from 20.2 per cent to 16.2 per cent, while that of West European companies rose from 45.5 per cent to 53.2 per cent. Preliminary figures for 1988 show that the deterioration has continued. Although the poor performance can be explained in part by foreign exchange fluctuations, following the appreciation of European currencies against the US dollar, so far there has been no US export improvement in volume terms, as might have been expected from the devaluation.

"I am really puzzled why the J-curve effect hasn't benefited us yet," said a US trade official. As at next January, EC exports to Israel will be given a further boost by the elimination of all duties on industrial goods; provided, that is, additional hidden import barriers are not erected in compensation for the reductions.

"We cannot accept Israeli (non-tariff) adjustments which cancel out the benefits we gain under our accord," warned Mr. Gwyn Morgan, the European Community's ambassador to Israel. The EC has been asked to accept the same phasing out period for offending import barriers as the US has just negotiated, but is expected to press instead for an earlier deadline, of 1992.

Caught unprepared over these alleged breaches in both the letter and spirit of the FTA often upheld by the outgoing Shamir Government as a shining example of the close ties between Israel and the US officials in Jerusalem were reluctant this week to discuss either the Washington negotiations or the general health of the trade pact.

"I have nothing to gain from talking to you," was the only comment of Mr. Marcel Shanton, one of the Industry and Trade Minister's negotiators. Mr. Max Livnat, director of foreign trade, confined himself to noting that at least Israel had been able to win a breathing space in which gradually to demolish the Tama tax.

In their more expansive free-thinking moods, Israeli officials like to talk of the FTA with the US and their separate trade liberalism agreement with the Community, which dates back to 1975, as interlinked bridges. By setting up in Israel, multinationals could profit from the tariff reductions enjoyed in both directions, they say. A US subsidiary could, for example, use its Israel base to export components or finished goods to the large Community market.

In practice, though, the dream remains a long way from being realised. Few US companies have taken advantage of the offer. And those that have, like Intel, the microchip manufacturer, complain loudly about the way in which the rules of the game have been changed since their arrival. Setting aside those Israelis who carry dual US/Israeli citizenship, there is not one expatriate American manager resident in Israel.

ONE HUNDREDTH CONGRESS, CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, November 29, 1988.

Hon. GEORGE P. SHULTZ,
Secretary of State, Department of State, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I write regarding the three-year-old Free Trade Agreement (FTA) between the United States and the Government of Israel.

Specifically, I am concerned about recent reports that the FTA has failed to eliminate significant Israeli import barriers against U.S. goods and that U.S. exporters have not benefited from the FTA.

I would appreciate your comments on the following allegations:

Since the FTA came into effect, U.S. imports of Israeli goods have doubled, but U.S. exports have increased by less than 7%;

Between 1985–1987, the U.S. presence in the Israeli market fell from 20.1% to 16.2%, while the EC presence rose from 45.5% to 53.2%;

Israel continues to impose a series of non-tariff barriers, including discriminatory licensing and standards regulations, against U.S. imports;

I am interested in knowing if these conclusions are accurate and, if so, what specific steps the United States is taking or plans to take to remedy this situation.

I appreciate your prompt consideration of this matter. I look forward to hearing from you.

With best regards,

Sincerely yours,

LEE H. HAMILTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, December 21, 1988.

Hon. LEE H. HAMILTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East, Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am responding to your letter of November 29, expressing concern about the Free Trade Area Agreement (FTA) between the United States and Israel.

First I would like to respond to the specific points in your letter and then provide a context in which they may be better understood.

Since the FTA entered into force in 1985, U.S. imports of Israeli goods increased from $2.186 billion to $2.753 billion in 1987, or 28%. Exports from the United States to Israel increased over the same period from $1.679 billion to $1.932 billion, or 15%.

As you cited, between 1985–1987, in current dollar terms, the U.S. presence in the Israeli market fell from 20.1% to 16.2% while the EC presence rose from 45.5% to 53.2%. The increase of the EC market share is overstated in volume terms because part of the increased market share reflects the increased price but not volume of European goods as the value of the dollar fell 33% from 1985 to 1987.

U.S. exporters are indeed confronted with complex and sometimes arbitrarily applied non-tariff barriers that have sometimes prevented them from enjoying all the benefits anticipated under the FTA.

One reason the United States has not benefited more from the FTA is that the United States is the second party to have a free trade arrangement with Israel. The European Community (EC) has had a free trade arrangement with Israel covering industrial goods since 1975. Duty reductions were phased-in and EC industrial goods will enter Israel duty free as of January 1, 1989. Under the U.S.-Israel FTA, concluded 10 years after the EC accord, duties on all products will be phased out by January 1, 1995. Until then, certain U.S. goods will continue to be at a comparative disadvantage with similar EC goods.

On the other hand, we routinely monitor compliance and have consistently sought to ensure that the Government of Israel fully meets its obligations under the FTA. To this end we now meet with our Israeli counterparts twice a year, in a delegation led by the United States Trade Representative. In these meetings, and in frequent informal contacts between our governments, we discuss concerns such as those raised in your letter and to resolve specific problems we each face in implementing the letter and spirit of the FTA. Most recently in November, we reached ad referendum agreements to end the discriminatory application of certain Israeli taxes. We also pursued U.S. compliants about the arbitrary lack of or delayed issuance of import licenses and the discriminatory application of certain standards regulations.

I hope this answers your questions. Should you wish further information about this issue, I shall be happy to provide same.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

J. EDWARD FOX,
Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs.

U.S. TRADE REPRESENTATIVE,
EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Washington, DC, December 14, 1988.

Hon. LEE H. HAMILTON,
U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN HAMILTON: Thank you for your letter of November 29 regarding bilateral trade performance under the U.S.-Israel Free Trade Area (FTA) Agreement and Israel's trade policies and their effect on the FTA.

Many of the assertions made in your letter about Israeli trade practices are correct and have been the subject of a series of intensive consultations and negotiations over the past seven months. Before addressing the results of these negotiations, however, it may be helpful to briefly describe the nature of the FTA and our trade performance under it.

The U.S.-Israel FTA, which became effective in September 1985, provides for the gradual elimination of all customs duties by January 1, 1995. Some duties were eliminated immediately, others phased out over a longer period of time. All duties, however, will be eliminated by 1995. As a result of the gradual approach adopted for implementing the agreement, it was expected that trade would increase slowly at first as exporters and importers became aware and took advantage of the new benefits of the FTA.

It is true that imports from Israel have increased more rapidly than U.S. exports to Israel, at least at first, but the Israeli advantage has been by far less than that stated in your letter. Over the three year period 1985 through 1987, imports from Israel did not double but increased by 25 percent, while U.S. exports increased just 7 percent. However, U.S. exports to Israel have jumped markedly during the first nine months of 1988, an increase of 26 percent over the same period of 1987, compared to a 12 percent increase in imports from Israel over this period. If one examines trade performance under the FTA from 1985 through an annualized 1988, imports from Israel are found to have increased 36 percent, while U.S. exports to Israel have gone up 34 percent over this period.

More troubling is the fact that the U.S. presence in the Israeli market fell from 20 percent in 1985 to 16 percent in 1987, while the EC presence in Israel rose from 45 percent to 53 percent. This may be reversing itself in 1988, given the large increase in U.S. exports, but data for 1988 are not yet available. A number of macro-economic factors may be responsible for the developments in the previous years that are unrelated to the FTA. One possible related development is that the EC and Israel also have a free trade agreement that went into effect in 1975 and will reach full implementation in 1989. This "head start" in the phase out of customs duties has given the EC advantages in the Israeli market that can only be overcome with time as duties facing U.S. products are phased out.

One way to maximize U.S. exports to Israel is to be constantly vigilant for and attack any non-tariff barriers Israel may attempt to maintain. As your letter correctly notes, the Israelis have been quietly maintaining a number of such practices. When we discovered these barriers early in 1988, we immediately demanded consultations with the Israeli Government and warned that we would take appropriate countermeasures if satisfactory results were not achieved. Through a series of negotiations, the Israelis have agreed to make significant modifications in these practices. Careful monitoring of the implementation of these agreements will not be required to ensure full compliance with their terms.

I am enclosing a summary of these recent agreements. If you would like further information, please feel free to contact Joe Papovich of my staff at 395-3211.

Sincerely,

CLAYTON YEUTTER.

SUMMARY OF RECENT TRADE AGREEMENTS WITH ISRAEL

Purchase Tax Exemptions: The Israelis have been discriminating between domestic producers and importers in the application of their purchase tax (a form of luxury tax)

by exempting domestic Israeli producers from the tax if it was paid by these producers on any raw material input. Since the same opportunity for an exemption does not exist for importers, this gave domestic producers a significant cost advantage. The Israelis have now agreed to eliminate the exemption by either eliminating the purchase tax on products where such discrimination exists or by imposing a purchase tax on domestic products at a rate equal to that applied to like imported products.

TAMA: Agreement has also been achieved on a customs' process known as the TAMA, which is an estimated uplift used by the Israelis to equate import values, for purposes of collecting the purchase tax, with goods sold in Israel at the wholesale level. Israel collects the purchase tax at the wholesale level, yet collects the tax on imports as they pass through customs and on domestically manufactured goods as they leave the plant. Domestic Israeli producers are permitted to declare the mark-up that applies to the goods from the factory to the point of the wholesale transaction, while imports are subjected to the arbitrary uplift in valuation known as the TAMA. We had been concerned that steadily increasing TAMA rates, which are calculated nontransparently, may have been offsetting duty reductions achieved under the FTA.

The Israelis have agreed to progressively phase out the TAMA by 1995 and in the interim to allow registered importers, starting January 1, 1989, the option of either 1) declaring the actual mark-up between importation and sale at the wholesale level (in the same manner as followed by Israeli domestic producers) or 2) using the TAMA rate. Thus full national treatment is achieved immediately for goods imported by registered importers. After 1995, the TAMA will not be utilized in any way on goods entered by registered importers.

Licensing: Rather than according the U.S. the special liberalized licensing benefits agreed upon under the FTA, the Israelis in certain instances were requiring American goods to meet the more stringent licensing requirements imposed on goods from third countries. The Israeli Government agreed to conform to their earlier commitments under the FTA wherever this was not occurring. They also agreed to issue a special directive to all Israeli Ministry of Industry and Trade licensing officers listing all U.S. products to be accorded special licensing status and the procedures to be used in handling applications for their importation.

Standards: The U.S. and Israel agreed that all prevailing standards in Israel will be imposed equally on U.S. and Israeli goods. There will thus be national treatment for U.S. goods. Furthermore, we had discovered that certain voluntary Israeli standards were being applied in a mandatory fashion on imports. To remove the possibility of this occurring in the future, Israel agreed to convert, over the next 24 months, all voluntary standards imposed on imports to mandatory standards.

Plywood: The FTA gives Israel the right to maintain a quantitative restriction on imports of American plywood, but the Israelis had never declared the quota level and had been issuing very few import licenses. We have been insisting on a reasonable, known quota. During these consultations, the Israelis agreed to provide a quota of 2,000 cubic meters for 1989, growing 17 percent annually to 5,000 cubic meters by 1995, with 10 percent annual growth thereafter.

A BILL TO ESTABLISH PUBLIC FINANCING OF GENERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGNS FOR THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

HON. ANTHONY C. BEILENSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill today to finance general election campaigns for the U.S. House of Representatives with public funds, in the same manner as general election campaigns for the Presidency have been funded for the last four presidential elections. This bill is virtually identical to the public financing bills that I sponsored—along with about two dozen of our colleagues—in each of the last two Congresses.

This bill would entitle each major-party House candidate to a grant of $200,000 in Federal funds to spend on his or her general election campaign, in exchange for limiting campaign expenditures to that amount. By doing so, it would assure House candidates a sufficient amount of funds to wage a viable campaign without having to appeal to and depend upon special-interest contributors.

This bill addresses the most disturbing problems with our existing congressional campaign finance system: the growing reliance on contributions from special-interest political action committees [PAC's], excessive campaign spending, the enormous amount of time and effort lawmakers spend raising campaign funds, and the advantages of incumbency in raising those funds.

In the 1986 elections, 323 House Members received more than $100,000 in PAC money for their reelection campaigns; 130 Members received at least $200,000 in PAC funds, compared to only three who received that much 6 years earlier. Campaign expenditure figures for the 1988 elections are expected to show similar, if not greater, use of PAC funds to finance congressional campaigns.

During the last decade, spending on congressional campaigns has increased fivefold. The more PAC's contribute to campaigns, the higher the spending rises. The higher campaign spending rises, the more candidates turn to PAC's for contributions. We cannot break this pattern of higher spending and increased reliance on PAC money without substituting public funds for private, special-interest funds.

Our campaign finance system has also created a distinct advantage for incumbents in our electoral process. In the 1986 elections, PAC's gave six times as much money to incumbents as to challengers. That year, incumbents were able to outspend their challengers by an average of 3 to 1; not surprisingly, incumbents had a reelection rate of 98 percent. Campaign expenditure figures for the 1988 elections, where 99 percent of incumbents seeking reelection were reelected, are expected to show even greater imbalances in spending levels of incumbents and challengers.

The more candidates rely on PAC money to fund their campaigns, the more indebted they become to the special-interest groups represented by the PAC's. This indebtedness shows up both in obvious ways, such as the outcome of a vote on a matter which has been heavily lobbied by an interest group which has donated large sums money to congressional campaigns—and in more subtle ways, such as Members' decisions about whose phone calls to return. The overall effect is that lawmakers are increasingly paying more attention to the views and desires of Washington-based representatives of interest groups, and less to ordinary constituents whom we are elected to represent.

As a result, our citizens are losing confidence in their elected officials and in the integrity of our electoral system; they are becoming increasingly cynical about the democratic political process. Providing congressional candidates with public funds with which to run their campaigns would help infuse Americans with a new sense of confidence in their elected representatives and in the electoral process.

This bill, which is modeled on the successful public financing system we have had for the last four Presidential elections, would provide each major-party candidate who has an opponent with $200,000 for his or her campaign expenses in general, special, or runoff elections. A candidate who accepts the funding would then be limited to spending only that amount on his general election campaign. He could not accept any funds from PAC's or from individuals, nor could he use any of his own money. The $200,000 grant and spending limit would be indexed to the cost of living and thus would probably increase a modest amount with each election cycle.

Minor-party and new-party candidates would also be eligible for Federal funds, but in lesser amounts. The amounts would be based on the same formula as that used in the Presidential system: minor-party candidates would receive an amount proportionate to the vote they received in relationship to the major-party candidates in prior elections; new-party candidates would be eligible for funding retroactively if they received at least 5 percent of the vote.

A candidate could opt to decline the public financing and, instead, raise and spend any amount of money. However, for every dollar he raises, incurs, or spends above $200,000, his opponent would receive $1 in Federal funds. Thus, no matter how much money he spends on his campaign, his opponent could spend an identical amount. That way, there would be no advantage for a candidate who is able to raise a great deal of money privately to do so rather than accept the funding and limits proposed in this bill.

In order to ensure that a publicly financed candidate has at his disposal the same amount of funding as his privately financed opponent, privately financed candidates would be required to file reports of receipts and expenditures at frequent intervals during the campaign—monthly up to 60 days before the election, weekly from 59 to 11 days prior to the election, and daily during the 10 days preceding the election.

Funding for House campaigns would be provided through the taxpayer check-off on Federal income tax return forms that is now used to direct revenue to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund. If there were two major-party candidates in every congressional district, and each spent his entire $200,000 entitlement, Federal funding would amount to $175 million each election cycle, or $87.5 million on an annual basis. However, the exact cost in any election cycle would depend on how many candidates are unopposed—and therefore ineligible for funds—how many choose private financing, how many spend less than their allotment, and how many minor-party and new-party candidates become eligible for funds.

This bill covers general elections only; campaigns for primary elections would continue to be financed privately. A candidate who chose public financing could not spend unused primary funds during his general election campaign.

Finally, I would like to briefly respond to two perennial arguments against public financing: that public financing favors incumbents, and that it costs too much.

The incumbent-advantage argument is that if challengers and incumbents are held to the same level of funding, the incumbent will have a built-in advantage because the incumbent already has name recognition. There may well be a handful of races in which a challenger is hampered by not being able to spend more than the incumbent, but, by and large, challengers in fact do not raise more than incumbents under our current system; as noted above, the average incumbent now outspends his opponent by 3 to 1.

Our PAC-dominated system has proved to be a greater barrier to challengers than any form of public financing could ever be. As mentioned above, 98 percent and 99 percent of House incumbents who sought reelection in 1986 and 1988 respectively were successful—in large part because PAC's gave six times as much money to incumbents as to their challengers. Except in very unusual cases, public financing would benefit, rather than hamper, challengers.

The cost of public financing is also a common argument against it, especially at a time when huge, recurring Federal budget deficits are forcing us to pare spending wherever possible. But the truth is that one major reason why we are not doing an adequate job of controlling the Federal budget is that Congress won't vote to cut the programs or tax breaks that are designed to benefit the same special-interest groups that are financing congressional campaigns. In my opinion, $87.5 million—the approximate annual cost of this bill—is a small price to pay for a House of Representatives that is not indebted to special-interest groups.

Mr. Speaker, the congressional campaign finance system badly needs an overhaul. Full public funding, which has been tested in our Presidential elections, would vastly increase public confidence in the electoral process and in elected House Members. I urge our colleagues to join in support of it.

PEACE AND THE SUPERPOWERS

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I had the great pleasure of meeting Patrick O'Kane of Coventry when I attended a moral re-armament meeting in London a few weeks ago. Active in political affairs in the United Kingdom he speaks and writes with clarity and to the point. I place in the RECORD an article he wrote "Peace and the Superpowers," published in the Industrial Pioneer and another published in the Pioneer which is entitled: "Where Once Was Right and Wrong, We Now Have Right and Left."

PEACE AND THE SUPERPOWERS

With clarity and courage Neil Kinnock's speech to the Labour Party Conference drew the real battlelines we face. He moved the emphasis from policies to principles, from right against left to right against wrong. His conclusion was that the battle is against evil. The trade unions and the Labour Party were born to tackle the evils in a system that saw people as mere commodities. They are needed today as much as ever, but something else needs to be faced squarely if we are to hold the Labour Movement together.

There is the Capitalism of Economics and there is the Capitalism of Power. The latter goes on as much in the trades unions and Labour Party as it does in the board rooms of the City of London. But it is a more insidious kind of capitalism. It takes the loyalty of the workers, the needs of the unemployed and the fears of the minorities not in order to lift them up and give them dignity, but to use them as pawns in a political power game.

Is this the destiny of the Labour Movement, one class fighting the other? This was not Keir Hardie's dream nor that of the founding fathers of the Movement. Their goal was not the fighting of the class war but the ending of it. That is still the destiny of Labour, a moral crusade to end evil.

The greatest threat hanging over us all is nuclear annihilation. Millions march for peace because they fear the bomb. Millions of others fear being defenceless and put their security in the bomb. Fear is running the world, destroying hope for the future. What is Britain's contribution to world peace?

Britain started the Industrial Revolution and produced Adam Smith, who gave us Capitalism, which is now the philosophy of America. As a militant reaction to this, Karl Marx wrote his thesis on Communism in London from the evidence he got from Engels, whose father owned a factory in Manchester. This is now the philosophy of the Soviet Union. These superpowers have huge nuclear arsenals, so the class war becomes the nuclear war.

It is Britain's task to demonstrate that the country which created the philosophies which divide the world, can provide a philosophy which can unite and save the world from itself?

Can those who proclaim peace and an end to war become peacemakers? Can we turn our factories from battlegrounds of confrontation into laboratories for finding concensus on the principle of 'not who is right but what is right'? Can we bring peace to our multicultural cities, so that they can be a microcosm of the global village—peoples of every race, colour and creed sharing, and learning how to live the secret of 'unity in diversity'?

Can we bring peace into our homes so that our family life becomes a source of strength in society? Can we find peace in our own hearts to give inspired leadership despite the chaos around us?

Could it be that with nuclear oblivion hanging over us, we can find the courage and vision to look up out of our entrenched viewpoints to find the one thing that Britian can give the world which will save it: the answer to confrontation and class war? It will take the commitment of us all, but can Labour lead the way?

A Britian at peace with itself will be a peacemaker among the nations.

Morality, values, right and wrong, are starting to become, if not fashionable, then certainly topical. The response often thrown at people who do take a stand on moral principles is that they wish to return to "Victorian values." This implies that morality equals "Victorian values," and therefore has something to do with the great economic evils of those days, i.e. that morality was a tool of the rich to hold down the poor.

It is certainly true that many proclaiming Christians did very little to help the poor and were often involved in increasing their misery. It took William Wilberforce 20 years to get the Bill for the abolition of the slave trade through Parliament. Admiral Lord St. Vincent argued that, "The whole of society would go to pieces if the wedge of abstract right were once to enter into any part of it." The Earl of Abingdon said, "Humanity is a private feeling and not a public principle to act upon." Time and again Wilberforce was thwarted by economic interests which overrode the consciences of professing Christians.

Lord Shaftesbury, who was known as the people's Earl, spent a lifetime reforming and improving the conditions of the industrial revolution, which included children as young as four and five working down pits, in the mills and going up chimneys as sweeps. He met sustained resistance from nearly all quarters of the Establishment, who were convinced that the only safety in economic affairs lay in giving capital free play, whatever the results in the lives of men, women and children.

Wilberforce and Shaftesbury achieved so much because they believed that what was morally wrong could never be politically and economically right; that the laws of God are higher than the man-made laws of economics. Many Christians were compromised on this point. One classic example was Charles Trevelyan, permanent Head of the Treasury in the 1840s. He was a very able and convinced Christian. He was a member of the 'Clapham Sect', a group of Christians originally formed around Wilberforce (who died in 1833) to reform Britain and the Empire to Christian ways of living. Yet he, like so many of his day, held on to another belief—"political economy." This meant that there should be no interference in the workings of the market place. because this would undermine the whole system and therefore the well-being of the country.

Unfortunately for Ireland the famines were to devastate the land during the 1840s and Trevelyan and his ideas were to turn tragedy into catastrophe. (See Chapter 5 of Robert Kee's book: "Ireland—A History"). One million people starved to death or died of disease brought on by famine between 1845 and 1849. Out of a population that had once been 8 million, one and a half million had to emigrate. Charles Trevelyan was knighted for his efforts, but his legacy has cursed the relationship between Britain and Ireland to this day.

In the light of history Wilberforce and Shaftesbury and men like them have proved a great blessing to their nation. They accepted that morality was not only a private affair but a public duty, and that any man-made law of politics or economics which ran contrary to those moral laws was evil and must be opposed.

When we separate private morality from public principle we are compromised, and it is that compromise which is referred to today as "Victorian values." We need to restore moral values, as we are paying the price for indulgence and irresponsibility. These values are meant to be at the forefront of making a better world, as well as better individuals, thereby clarifying our response to unemployment, the inner cities, South Africa, and Third World, etc.

When a society, through indulgence, corruption and neglect, loses sight of its moral heritage, something must fill the vacuum. Where once was right and wrong, we now have right and left, not only as policies and points of view, but as principles. The man-made laws of Adam Smith and Karl Marx have taken over where once the Sermon on the Mount was our shared heritage.

INTRODUCTION OF NORTHERN IRELAND FAIR EMPLOYMENT LEGISLATION

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today, along with a bipartisan group of members of the Committee on Ways and Means, to deal with the serious problems of unemployment and employment discrimination in Northern Ireland. This legislation is similar to legislation we introduced on this subject in the last Congress.

The purpose of the measure is to provide a constructive response to the dual problems of unemployment and employment discrimination in Northern Ireland—problems which are inextricably linked. It is an incentive measure, designed to encourage United States firms to locate in Northern Ireland and designed to encourage firms that are already there to comply with a series of fundamental nondiscrimination standards modeled after standards proposed by the British Government.

I think it is fair to say that every Member of this House is aware of the terrible problems in Northern Ireland, many of which can be traced to the discrepancies in employment rates in Catholic regions of that country and in other areas. Workers also tell of rampant discrimination, both direct and indirect, in employment practices. Some statistics tell an important part of the story.

For example, the unemployment rate in England, Scotland, and Wales is roughly 9 percent. The unemployment rate in Northern Ireland is 18.3 percent. Even worse, in the predominantly Catholic regions of Northern Ireland, the unemployment rate is as high as 59 percent.

To deal with these obvious discrepancies, legislation has recently been introduced in the British Parliament, at the request of Prime Minister Thatcher, designed to further tighten antidiscrimination laws in Northern Ireland. These proposals have yet to be enacted into law—although, with the support of the Prime Minister, I have confidence that they will be. I remain concerned that the British Government may not aggressively enforce these standards, however; furthermore, the United States Government should not be subsidizing behavior overseas which would be blatantly illegal if practiced here on our shores.

Because my legislation deals with income tax incentives, I will first detail the current tax treatment of foreign source income, and explain the two major income tax provisions in our legislation.

PRESENT LAW

FOREIGN TAX CREDIT

The U.S. taxes its citizens on their worldwide income. One major exception to this general rule is the foreign tax credit. It allows U.S. taxpayers a credit against income tax liability for a tax paid to a foreign taxing jurisdiction. The credit is subject to an overall limit, equal generally to the amount of taxes paid on that income had it been earned in the United States. The excess of the tax actually paid over the limit can generally be carried forward. In general, the foreign tax credit is denied with respect to operations in South Africa.

EARNINGS OF SUBSIDIARIES OF U.S. CORPORATIONS—DEFERRAL GENERALLY

Another major exception to the general rule that the U.S. taxes worldwide income is the principle of deferral. Generally, income earned by foreign subsidiaries of U.S. corporations is not subject to tax in the United States unless those earnings are repatriated—that is, distributed to shareholders as dividends. The foreign tax credit can reduce the tax on those dividends, however. In certain cases, the income of a foreign subsidiary of a U.S. corporation can be subject to current U.S. tax, especially in the case of the Code's subpart F provisions.

EXPLANATION OF PROVISION

IN GENERAL

The bill creates an income tax incentive for United States firms to locate in Northern Ireland. Under the incentive, the foreign tax credit could generally be calculated without regard to the limitation, discussed above. In addition, the bill denies the foreign tax credit and the benefits of deferral for firms located in Northern Ireland which fail to comply with a series of fair employment standards. Finally, the legislation contains compliance and monitoring provisions, and grants to the Internal Revenue Service the authority to monitor compliance with the bill's provisions.

FOREIGN TAX CREDIT—INCENTIVE PROVISIONS

The bill allows United States corporations located in Northern Ireland to calculate the foreign tax credit without regard to the foreign tax credit limitation if the firm meets a high unemployment location test and a traditionally discriminated against test.

The first test is met if the firm is located in a region of Northern Ireland which is an area of high unemployment. For purposes of the provision, the sponsors intend that an area of high unemployment is a parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland with an unemployment rate in excess of 20 percent. The sponsors are aware that unemployment statistics are not kept based upon parliamentary constituencies, but believe that these statistics could be made readily available. Nonetheless, the intent of the sponsors is to encourage employment in at least the following regions of Northern Ireland: Belfast, Cookstown, Dungannon, Limavady, Derry, Magherafelt, Moyle, Newry and Mourne, and Strabane.

The traditionally discriminated against test is met if at least 40 percent of the corporation's work force were composed of a religious minority in all of Northern Ireland. A firm could not meet this test merely by dismissing workers who were not members of a religious minority in Northern Ireland, since the intent of the legislation is to encourage employment.

As discussed, the legislation allows employers to calculate the foreign tax credit without regard to the foreign tax credit limitation. For example, if a firm had Northern Ireland manufacturing income of $10 and worldwide income of $100, and paid $4 in tax on the Northern Ireland income, present law would limit the credit to $3.40. The legislation would allow the full $4 to be claimed as a credit. The benefit would only apply if the tax rate imposed in Northern Ireland did not differ materially from the tax rate imposed on income from other sources by the British Government.

FOREIGN TAX CREDIT AND DEFERRAL—NONDISCRIMINATION STANDARDS

There are four fair employment standards. First, the taxpayer would have to take steps to insure that no direct or indirect discrimination existed in employment, based upon religious or political grounds. Second, the taxpayer would have to end any unjustified employment requirement or condition which places members of one religious group at a disadvantage. Third, the taxpayer would have to establish that they practice equality of opportunity in employment. Finally, the taxpayer would have to take advantage of affirmative action programs—including the use of goals and timetables—designed to give underrepresented gorups better access to employment and training opportunities.

The sponsors intend that these proposals be construed similarly to the proposals recently advanced by the British Government. Therefore, a certificate of compliance with the fair employment standards—or other statement indicating compliance—by the newly-created Fair Employment Commission that a taxpayer was abiding by the Code of Practice would possess strong evidentiary value that the taxpayer was in compliance with the bill's standards.

However, such notice of compliance would not be conclusive since the Secretary of the Treasury could at some point determine that the British Government was not aggressively enforcing the fair employment standards. Finally, a statement that the taxpayer was not in compliance—by the Commission or the Fair Employment Tribunal, or other agency of the British Government—would be a conclusive presumption that the taxpayer was in violation of the bill's standards.

Under the bill, taxpayers found to be not in compliance with the bill's provisions would lose both the foreign tax credit with respect to Northern Ireland source income, as well as the benefit of deferral with respect to that income, for example, Northern Ireland income would be treated as subpart F income.

DETERMINATIONS BY SECRETARY

Under the legislation, the Secretary would be required to determine by July 1 of every year—beginning in 1990—whether a U.S. taxpayer was in violation of any fair employment standard. In addition, every taxpayer having operations in Northern Ireland would be required to make an annual report to the Secretary on the extent of its compliance with the fair employment standards. A taxpayer who willfully failed to make such a report would be fined not more than $25,000 and could be subject to 1 year in prison. The sponsors intend that a statement by an employer similar to one required under the proposed British legislation would be sufficient for these purposes.

EFFECTIVE DATE

The bill would generally be effective for income taxes paid or accrued, or income received or accured, after December 30, 1989. The employment incentive provisions would be effective for taxable years beginning after that date.

Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this legislation will go a long way toward rectifying the wrongs of the past, to make sure that every child born in the North of Ireland, whether from the minority community or the majority community, will have equal opportunity: in housing, and, most importantly, in the opportunity to earn an honest, decent living. It will insure that those people will not be discriminated against either when hired or when promoted, and it will insure that United States businesses located in the Northern Ireland will adhere to the same fair employment standards that we hold them to in the United States.

Illegal activity or illegal discrimination that would not for one second be tolerated in the United States of America cannot be tolerated in any other nation of the world. I urge every American company doing business in Northern Ireland to take a close look at these employment standards, at their hiring practices and their promotion standards, and make sure even before the enactment of this legislation that they are not in violation of some of the most basic principles of fairness and decency that we enforce on American companies here on American soil.

ELDERLY EARNINGS OPPORTUNITY ACT OF 1989

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Elderly Earnings Opportunity Act of 1989, to reduce the penalties our older citizens face if they choose to work. Currently, under the earnings test, Social Security benefits are substantially reduced for millions of seniors each year.

My bill will alter the Social Security earnings test in the following ways:

First, eliminate the current provision in the law that requires larger benefit reductions for workers under age 65 than for those age 65 to 69.

Second, gradually phase in an increased amount of earnings which are exempt from the reduction—over and above those that would occur under current law; and

Third, require the Social Security Administration to report to Congress in the year 2002 on the effect of the earnings test on the well being of the elderly and the economy in general.

Mr. Speaker, the earnings test was devised in a different time and under different economic circumstances than we face today. The 1930's was an era that required creative measures to stimulate economic growth and employment while dealing with the enormous hardships and deprivation brought on by the Great Depression. The Social Security Program was an ingenious way to do both these things.

There were thousands of older people who needed their jobs and could not afford to retire—very few had pensions or savings to fall back on. And, there were younger people in desperate need of jobs who were frozen out of the stagnant economy because jobs weren't being freed up for them. The earnings test provide a way out of both these problems—benefits were conditioned on the loss of earnings through retirement or death.

But today's economy needs older workers. It needs their individual service, their production and the cumulative experiences they bring to the work force—skills, talents, and good judgement. Simply put, we need them to help the United States be competitive. We need to be concerned about the shape of our work force in the future. As the baby boom generation enters its retirement years early in the next century, we may badly need the skilled labor older workers provide to keep our economy strong, since there will be fewer younger workers following the baby boomers. For these important reasons, the Congress just last year eliminated the mandatory retirement age.

Congress should build on the elimination of the mandatory retirement test by providing more encentives to senior's who would like to work. The best way we can do that is to raise the Social Security earnings test. This may encourage seniors to stay in the work force and will remove barriers that keep people from working today.

I do understand that some believe there are work incentives in the Social Security system right now: Reductions for early retirement, benefit recomputation for continuing to work, and additional credits for retiring after age 65.

However, the current earnings test proves to be a strong psychological barrier. Some seniors believe that any earnings will jeopardize their benefits, so they don't work at all. And, studies have shown that many who know that only a portion of their benefits will be withheld only work up to that amount.

But more than that, the test is a tough one. Once the exempt amount is exceeded, a very steep penalty is imposed for working. The ratio is almost $1 in taxes for every $2 earned. This is an unfair penalty on seniors of modest means who need to work to make ends meet.

How can low and moderate income elderly people, lacking stocks, bonds, mutual funds and big pensions be expected to supplement their incomes? How can they possibly improve their circumstances? And, how can they contribute to an economy that needs their skills and energy down the road?

Mr. Speaker, we need a growing economy. And, we need to provide opportunities for our workers. We can't do either if we artificially limit a vital national resource—the elderly who want to work. I believe that the Social Security earnings test creates a severe artificial limit.

We must reduce the major hidden tax that keeps our seniors of moderate means from working. Those lacking substantial unearned income should be given greater opportunity to improve their own well-being while contributing to society to the best of their ability.

I hope my colleagues will join me in sponsoring the Elderly Earnings Opportunity Act of 1989. I look forward to expanding the economic opportunity of our Nation's seniors in this historic 101st Congress.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS EQUIPMENT MANUFACTURING—MADE IN THE USA

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, in the past, outgoing President Reagan had described the telecommunications industry as one in which "we are still a leader in innovation."

Despite this optimistic assessment, recent information released by his administration indicates that a more ominous outlook is warranted. Last year, the United States suffered record trade deficits. Trade deficits for telecommunications equipment soared upwards toward $2 billion last year. Today, not one residential telephone instrument—the device pioneered by Alexander Graham Bell—is manufactured by an American company in the United States. I have drafted legislation to reverse this trend.

Today I am introducing a bill to establish our Nation's policy with respect to telecommunications equipment manufacture. Our current policies—or the lack thereof—have resulted in increasing telecommunications trade deficits, as well as unemployment and worker dislocation in that industry, to say nothing of the erosion of American dominance of the telecommunications industry internationally and the related brain drain.

We have observed American firms like AT&T going offshore to manufacture residential telephones and we have seen an increase in proposed joint venture activities between Bell Operating Companies and foreign telecommunications equipment manufacturers.

Our trade imbalance results from at least two misguided policies. First, the Reagan administration permitted foreign nations, such as Japan, to bar high quality, American produced telecommunications equipment. Second, these same policymakers opened our trade doors to allow foreign manufacturers to make major inroads into our domestic markets. The door of free trade must swing both ways. While foreign products pile up higher on our docks and in our stores, American jobs are exported overseas. This is not an idle notion—the Commerce Department has estimated that over 2½ million jobs were lost last year as a result of the trade deficit.

In addition, American companies, lured by special tax breaks and low wages offered by Third World nations, have migrated offshore enmasse. There these expatriate corporations turn back the clock to recreate sweatshops reminiscent of the 19th century. For example, in 1985 AT&T shut down the last plant in the United States—in Shreveport, LA—where residential telephones were made. This operation is now located in Singapore.

This is not an isolated plant closing—since divestiture, AT&T has closed many of its operations in the United States, costing us not only productive capacity, put also at least 18,000 jobs. Companies such as AT&T apparently pledge allegiance to no flag. Their loyalty is to short-term profit and shareholder satisfaction.

In order to stop this exportation of domestic telecommunications manufacturing employment and profit to foreign countries, I propose legislation to require the Regional Bell Operating Companies to manufacture in the United States any equipment they want to sell here. The Bell Operating Companies are currently prohibited by the modified final judgment, in the AT&T divestiture case, from producing telecommunications equipment and have petitioned Judge Greene to allow them to be released from this restriction.

The judge has already decided not to grant this permission, but, should the BOC's be successful in their effort to obtain this relief by legislative means, as some regional carriers have indicated they hope to pursue, I fear they will follow the model set by their parent—AT&T—and move offshore to manufacture communications and customer premises equipment. I believe such manufacturing must be done in the United States.

My proposal provides for a comprehensive definition of the elusive word "manufacture." It specifies that manufacturing includes engineering design, product development, testing, and production. Under the terms of my bill, all these activities would take place in the United States.

In my view, Congress should take steps now to redirect our national telecommunications trade policy so that it benefits America—its consumers and its workers. we must not forget that the telephone is a uniquely American instrument—it was invented here and our predecessors built the world's best communications network around it.

I want to help give the competitive edge in international telecommunications back to America. Before we open telecommunications equipment manufacturing to more competition, I want to make sure that those interested in reaping profit from such action take full advantage of the abundant technological and human resources available to them right here in the "good old USA."

America can regain its preeminence in telecommunications trade if we look to our home-based resources. I invite my colleagues to join me in this effort to make America strong again—at least in this area of telecommunications trade.

H.R. —

A Bill to require that any telecommunications equipment or customer premises equipment manufactured by any of the former Bell operating companies may not be provided or sold in commerce in the United States unless such equipment is manufactured in the United States, and for other purposes

Be in enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited at the "Telecommunications Equipment Manufacturing Stimulation Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) America's telecommunications system is of critical importance to our national defense;

(2) a key element in maintaining our telecommunications system is ensuring that America possesses state-of-the-art telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment manufacturing capability;

(3) in recent years, America has increasingly relied on foreign production to meet its telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment needs;

(4) foreign firms are capturing a growing share of the American telecommunications market and American firms have increasingly turned to overseas production;

(5) investment in domestic manufacturing capacity has diminished, raising serious questions about America's continued ability to satisfy its telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment needs in times of crisis; and

(6) experience in recent years with other key industries such as computer and semiconductor technology demonstrates the high price when America falls behind other nations in research and development and in investment in manufacturing capability.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to assure that America's telecommunications manufacturing capability is not further diminished by requiring domestic manufacture and production of telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment by all former Bell operating companies, to the extent they are allowed to engage in the manufacture of telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment;

(2) to ensure that the necessary domestic telecommunications manufacturing capability so essential to the Nation's defense remains intact;

(3) to encourage domestic investment by both American and foreign firms desiring to engage in the manufacture of telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment;

(4) to improve America's trade deficit and balance of payments records; and

(5) to produce and maintain additional skilled manufacturing jobs for American workers, while avoiding massive subsidization by the Federal Government, so that short-term costs borne by customers represent an investment in long term increased competition and national security.

SEC. 3. REQUIREMENT OF DOMESTIC PRODUCTION.

It shall be unlawful for a Bell operating company to use any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce to sell or lease or to provide for sale or lease, directly or through any subsidiary or affiliate—

(1) any telecommunications equipment manufactured, directly or indirectly, by any Bell operating company, unless such equipment was manufactured in the United States; or

(2) any customer premises equipment manufactured, directly or indirectly, by any Bell operating company, unless such equipment was manufactured in the United States.

SEC. 4. ENFORCEMENT BY SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.—The Secretary of Commerce—

(1) shall be responsible for the enforcement of the requirements of this Act,

(2) shall, within six months after the date of enactment of this Act, prescribe such regulations, and provide such exemptions therefrom, as may be necessary for the effective enforcement of such requirements and the prevention of shortages in the supply of telecommunications equipment;

(3) may assess civil penalties pursuant to subsection (b);

(4) shall make the reports required by subsection (c);

(5) may conduct such investigations and hearings, take such testimony, and receive such evidence as may be necessary to carry out this Act; and

(6) for such purposes, may—

(A) administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses;

(B) secure directly from any department or agency of the United States information necessary to carry out this Act; and

(C) issue subpoenas requiring the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence, which subpoenas shall be enforceable by order of an appropriate district court of the United States.

(b) CIVIL PENALTIES.—(1) Whenever it shall appear to the Secretary of Commerce that any Bell operating company has violated the requirements of this Act, the Secretary of Commerce may bring an action in a United States district court to seek, and the court shall have jurisdiction to impose, a civil penalty to be paid by such Bell operating company, or any person aiding and abetting the violation of such Bell operating company. Such a penalty shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States.

(2) The amount of such penalty shall be determined by the court in light of the facts and circumstances, but shall not exceed three times the amount of profits obtained by the Bell operating company in the transaction or transactions that are the basis of the complaint.

If a Bell operating company upon whom such a penalty is imposed shall fail to pay such penalty within the time prescribed in the court's order, Secretary of Commerce shall refer the matter to the Attorney General who shall recover such penalty by action in the appropriate United States district court.

(c) ANNUAL REPORTS.—(1) The Secretary of Commerce shall, not later than six months after the date of enactment of this Act and annually thereafter, submit a report to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate on the state of the Nation's domestic telecommunications equipment manufacturing industry. Such report shall include—

(A) an evaluation of the continuing need for imposing the requirements of this Act;

(B) recommendations as to amendments to this Act or any other law necessary to enhance and increase the manufacture of telecommunications and customer premises equipment within the United States; and

(C) recommendations as to necessary regulatory treatment of such equipment purchases, sales, and other transactions, in addition to those set forth in section 5 of this Act.

(2) In carrying out any investigation for purposes of preparing the report under paragraph (1), the Secretary of Commerce may secure the assistance of United States Government agencies having responsibilities in telecommunications and related matters, including (but not limited to) the Federal Communications Commission, the National Telecommunications and Information Administration, and the Bureau of the Census.

SEC. 5. DISALLOWANCE OF FOREIGN EQUIPMENT COSTS BY FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION.

In determining whether any charge, practice, classification, or regulation of any common carrier under title II of the Communications Act of 1934 is or will be just and reasonable, the Federal Communications Commission shall exclude from any computation of the cost of providing the service in question the costs of procurement of any telecommunications equipment or customer premises equipment that is not manufactured in the United States.

SEC. 6. DEFINITIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—As used in this Act—

(1) TELECOMMUNICATIONS EQUIPMENT.—The term "telecommunications equipment" has the same meaning as such term has in the Modification of Final Judgment.

(2) CUSTOMER PREMISES EQUIPMENT.—The term "customer premises equipment" has the same meaning given such term in the Modification of Final Judgment.

(3) BELL OPERATING COMPANIES.—The term "Bell operating company" has the same meaning as such term has in the Modification of Final Judgment, except that such term does not include any centralized organization for the provision of engineering, research, and administrative services, the costs of which are shared by such operating companies or their affiliates.

(4) MANUFACTURED.—The term "manufactured" means each of the processes, other than specifying generic or functional characteristics of equipment, that are involved in bringing equipment into production and includes engineering design, product development, testing, manufacturing, engineering, and production.

(5) MANUFACTURED IN THE UNITED STATES.—Equipment is "manufactured in the United States" only if (A) such equipment is assembled in the United States, and (B) substantially all of the total cost of such equipment, including components, indirect costs, research, development, and labor, has been incurred in the United States.

(6) UNITED STATES.—The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense, includes the United States and any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

(7) MODIFICATION OF FINAL JUDGMENT.—The term "Modification of Final Judgment" means the judgment entered August 24, 1982, in United States v. Western Electric, Civil Action Numbered 82-0192 (United States District Court, District of Columbia).

(b) 1943 ACT DEFINITIONS APPLY.—Except as provided in subsection (a), terms used in this Act shall have the same meaning as is given such terms under the Communications Act of 1934.

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SECRETARY OF THE ARTS AND HUMANITIES

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which will create a Cabinet Office for the Arts and Humanities within the executive branch. I am certain that this agency will be an asset to the administration. It is essential that this country create a federally funded national program dedicated solely to the enhancement of its own cultural heritage, as well as to preserve and protect that heritage for future generations.

Mr. Speaker, why do we need a Secretary of the Arts and Humanities? Being a former fine arts student and professor, I have experienced the tremendous impact that artistic ventures have on society. Now, as a Member of Congress, I am able to advocate the funding of cultural programs on a national level. I know that the Federal Government is promoting the work of artists from all walks of life. However, this small amount of support is just not enough.

Mr. Speaker, in 1965, the National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities was created by Congress. Since its establishment, it has received strong bipartisan support over the years, both in Congress and in the White House. Presidents Johnson, Nixon, Ford, and Carter, who were men of strongly different philosophies on the purpose and function of government, all approved a congressional declaration that financial assistance for the arts and humanities is a proper responsibility of the Federal Government in encouraging and enriching the human mind and spirit, and in fostering the creativity of the American people. Those Presidents requested increased amounts of support for our cultural heritage and development; and each year Congress overwhelmingly approved such increases.

However, Mr. Speaker, did you know that only one-half of 1 percent of the Reagan administration's fiscal year 1989 budget is directed toward the support of the arts? While this figure represents a freeze, rather than a cut in spending, we must realize that these funds support all of our country's major cultural programs. These include: the National Endowment for the Arts, the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Institute of Museum Services, the Smithsonian Institution, the National Gallery of Art, and the Commission of Fine Arts.

As legislators, we have to ask ourselves: Can we justify the impact that these lean funding levels will have in our districts? Can we afford to lose the programs that foster the arts and humanities, museums, aquariums, zoos, and botanical gardens? Can we afford to lose our historical properties and programs that preserve our great works of art?

Ideally, all segments of our society should have the opportunity to take part in the experience of artistic expression and creativity. The Smithsonian Institution's fine collections and research services, as well as the programs under the jurisdiction of the NEA, NEH, and IMS provide direct return to Americans of all ethnic, social, economic, and educational levels. The benefits of these programs are realized in rural as well as urban America, by the old as well as the young. These agencies have helped to make participation in the cultural community more equitable and feasible for all segments of our society. But it is not enough. The Secretary of Arts and Humanities would ensure that all citizens were able to enjoy, learn, and benefit from the arts.

American artists have served as some of our most important ambassadors to the entire world. Through their work, artists have historically brought diverse cultures together. The shared experience of artistic expression and aesthetics creates the elements that enrich the soul and appeal to our higher instincts as human beings. American literature, music, performing and visual arts, and architecture are emulated all over the world and are embraced by those countries where our politics have failed.

People need the arts. Public attendance at museums is tremendous and overflow crowds are not uncommon. Furthermore, in these recent years when trade issues and competitiveness are so heatedly discussed, museums can and do make a unique and extraordinary contribution.

Mr. Speaker, we need to do something about our Nation's "artistic deficit." The Federal Government has an important responsibility to ensure the protection of our cultural heritage. We cannot allow financial danger and fiscal preoccupation to outweigh artistic decisions and creative energy. Our cultural institutions have continued to present innovative works, overwhelmingly high-quality performances and important outreach and educational programs. The continual financial struggle threatens the artistic freedom to invent, to take chances, and to present cultural activities to a broad range of our public. The Federal Government must continue to expand its small but vital role in the cultural integrity of our Nation. It is time to create a Cabinet office dedicated to the arts.

WEISS REINTRODUCES BILLS TO RESTORE SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS

HON. TED WEISS
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, in 1981, the President and the Congress broke a long standing contract with the American people. In the wake of a tax bonanza for the wealthy and an unprecedented, destabilizing military buildup, Social Security benefits were reduced, and in many cases eliminated. Through this action, the Reagan administration and its supporters in Congress exhibited a complete disregard for the well-being of our Nation's elderly, the disabled and their families, and the widowed and orphaned.

In 1983, Congress agreed to a package of Social Security changes meant to ensure the solvency of the system well into the next century. While many provisions of this agreement were commendable, the agreement once again called upon our Nation's elderly and disabled citizens to make further sacrifices to support the Reagan administration's misguided budget policies. Moreover, the 1983 Social Security changes failed to address many of the inequities that had been forced on the American people 2 years earlier.

Eight years have passed since the administration began to steamroll massive cuts in Social Security. Unfortunately, with the passage of time, some of the initial outrage over the 1981 cuts has failed. Many people have resigned themselves to accepting these policies—inequitable as they are—because the administration has created a climate vehemently hostile to social programs. Consequently, the prospect for reinstituting benefits, recklessly slashed in 1981, was not good.

As we begin the 101st Congress, it is clear that the political climate is changing. It is time to redress the damage wrought upon this Nation's Social Security programs. It is never too late to do what is fair. Today I am reintroducing legislation to restore three of the most important benefits that were cut in 1981. Specifically, these bills would restore student benefits, the mother's and father's benefit for those caring for children under age 18, and the lump-sum death benefit for all beneficiaries.

In the past years, the Social Security student benefit compensated dependent students attending college or vocational school for loss of income due to the death, retirement, or disability of their parents. This important benefit helped to equalize educational opportunities for those students who could not rely on their parents for support during those critical few years. Workers who earned this insurance recognized and appreciated its value in safeguarding the educational and employment future of their children.

Following the 1981 cuts, these benefits were progressively phased out until 1985, when they were completely eliminated. The elimination of the student benefit has inflicted incalculable hardships on those students who are least able to overcome them. Prior to the enacted cuts, approximately 800,000 student beneficiaries received an average of $3,000 per year in benefits. 80 percent of student beneficiaries were eligible because one of both parents were deceased or disabled. In 1977, 70 percent of the recipients of this program came from families whose income was less than $15,000. The cuts have imperiled the opportunity that these children have to advance and to succeed in adulthood by impeding, and in some cases destroying, their ability to pursue higher education.

The President claimed that these students would be adequately compensated for this loss of income security by other student aid programs. However, the administration conveniently failed to explain that in recent years other student assistance programs have also suffered tremendous cuts at the President's insistence. The hard truth is that other programs can not substitute for the critically depleted resources that have resulted from this cut. For the sake of these children, our greatest hope for the future, I urge that Congress take action on this bill to restore the Social Security Student Benefit.

The second bill I am reintroducing would restore benefits paid either to a mother or a father caring for an entitled child up to age 18. As a result of the 1981 reconciliation act, this important benefit only applies through a child's 16th birthday. It is no secret that most children between the ages of 16 and 18 are completing their high school education and depend on their parents to support them. In light of this fact, it is difficult to fathom the Reagan administration's rationale for slashing away at this program.

This cut is but another example of the whittling away of Social Security's protection for families of disabled, retired, or deceased workers raising dependent children. Once again I call upon my colleagues to reassert the priorities which existed before the 1981 cuts and support my effort to reinstate this critical benefit.

The third, and final bill I am reintroducing would restore the lump-sum death benefit in all cases. Following the 1981 cuts, this $225 benefit was restricted to death cases where there is a surviving spouse or dependent child. This benefit is no longer payable to other family members such as a sister, aunt, grandparent, or independent child, who may very well be the ones who assume responsibility for burial expenses. Estimates made when this cut was first enacted suggest that as many as 4.8 million people have been denied benefits as a result of this change.

The lump-sum death benefit is a small, but integral, part of the Social Security program. Implemented in 1935, it has helped to ease the burden of the high costs of funerals, and has given peace of mind to the older Americans who view this sum as critical to financing a dignified burial. This cut was a shameful way to penalize workers and their families. Full funding for the lump-sum death benefit should be promptly restored.

Across the country, older Americans, workers, and their families have expressed outrage that the Congress and the President have repeatedly ignored the Social Security compact and deprived thousands of families of the benefits they have earned. Poll after poll indicated that the American people are close to unanimity in their beliefs that Social Security benefits must be protected at all costs.

The Social Security system does not survive on the tax receipts of American workers alone. It also relies on the continuing support and confidence of workers and their families. By drastically cutting benefits against the public will, the administration and its supporters jeopardize public trust in the Social Security system and in the Government as well. We can not continue to gamble with the hopes and aspirations of millions of Americans. It is essential for the sake of these people and for the sake of the Social Security system as a whole that we act immediately.

Mr. Speaker, it is never too late to correct grave mistakes. I urge my colleagues to join with me to restore these Social Security benefits to the people who earned them and are entitled to them.

MARTIN LUTHER KING DAY

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, this year on January 16, 1989 our Nation will once again take time to commemorate the birthday of one of our Nation's great leaders, Martin Luther King, Jr.

To list all of Dr. King's accomplishments would indeed be an extensive task; however, we have only to look at the situation in South Africa today, where there is blatant hostility and violence among the races, to appreciate the tremendous impact which Dr. King's activities have had upon our Nation and to realize that we must continually strive to protect and improve upon the situation which exists today in our Nation.

It is our duty to carry on the mission essentially begun within the civil rights movement with Dr. King's desire to achieve justice and equality through peaceful and nonviolent means. Martin Luther King Day, therefore, must be not only a time to reflect upon our past, but also a time to look to the future and the changes that must be implemented to further the ideals upon which our great Nation was founded—justice and liberty for all.

I would not presume to pretend that our Nation is a utopia of freedom and equality. The recent tragedies of Howard Beach, the Staten Island racial incidents and Tawana Brawley in New York serves to remind us that the work of Dr. King is for from finished. Although we are deeply saddened that this situation could arise in our Nation, it is hoped that we can learn from these tragic occurrences and continue to progress through education and the examples set for us by Dr. King. For in the words of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., "If you can't fly, run. If you can't walk, crawl. But by all means, keep on moving." Let us continue the great tradition of Dr. King's ideals both through the appropriate commemoration of this national holiday and through legislation which reflects the ideals Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., strove so valiantly and diligently to achieve.

Accordingly, I implore my colleagues to encourage our constituents to join in participating in the many community activities which will commemorate the birthday of this notable leader, Martin Luther King, Jr., and to take the time to reflect on the many achievements of this inspirational civil rights leader and to dedicate ourselves to greater civil rights progress in the days ahead.

INTRODUCTION OF OMNIBUS SMALL BUSINESS BILL

HON. ANDY IRELAND

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, as we begin the 101st Congress I would like to take this opportunity to salute those men and women who have been such an integral part of the Nation's recent stunning economic recovery. I am talking about our Nation's job producers, innovators, and a major portion of our very social fabric—our small business community. In recognition of this vital economic segment today I will introduce an omnibus small business bill. The legislation will contain concepts put forth in both White House Conferences on Small Business and also introduced in past Congresses by both myself and other Members. It is time these ideas receive a thoughtful hearing before the appropriate committees of the Congress.

First, I propose to raise the status of the Administrator of the Small Business Administration to Cabinet level. As the President's principal adviser on all matters relating to small business the Administrator would be extremely valuable at all Cabinet sessions devoted to various economic questions confronting the Nation. This elevation would merely mean a small adjustment in the Administrator's pay status. The Cabinet exists by tradition and serves as a sounding board and an advisory body. In no way does Cabinet status require enlarging the bureaucracy or Federal expenditures.

Second, I propose permanent authorization for White House Conferences on Small Business. The conferences would be held once during each 4 year period following a Presidential election. The purposes of the conference shall be to increase public awareness of the essential contribution of small business; to identify the problems of small business; to examine the status of minorities and women as small business owners; to assist small business in carrying out its role as the Nation's job creator; to assemble small businesses to develop such specific and comprehensive recommendations for executive and legislative action as may be appropriate for maintaining and encouraging the economic viability of small business and thereby, the Nation; and to review the status of recommendations adopted at the next preceding White House Conference on Small Business. The previous two conferences have been very fruitful and beneficial not only to small business, but to our country as well. We should continue them.

Third, I propose that failure to comply with the requirements of the Regulatory Flexibility Act be subject to judicial review. At the present time this is not the case and there appears to be a body of evidence that some agencies on occasion have flaunted this law due to the lack of judicial review. I propose to change this.

Fourth, the Regulatory Flexibility Act which requires all Federal agencies to review the impact of their regulations upon small business has been a very constructive law. Unfortunately, due to the nature of their regulations, the Internal Revenue Service has been exempt from the act as a result of most of IRS' regulations being called interpretive rules. I propose to make such rules subject to the requirements of the Regulatory Flexibility Act.

Fifth, I propose that the chief counsel for advocacy for the Small Business Administration conduct a study on the impact of the Federal Government upon small business. This study should include, but not be limited to, the taxes small business must pay, various tax requirements that must be met, and forms that must be submitted, as well as the regulatory burden of all other Federal agencies by agency. We often in the Congress talk about the burden the Federal Government imposes on the small business community. However to date we have never really sat down to actually quantify this burden. I suspect the burden is far more serious than we know and each succeeding Congress only adds to it. This is information that we must and should have.

Sixth, I propose that the Administrator of the Small Business Administration shall conduct a study of the availability of credit in the United States to small business. There is a little understood market imperfection which exists in our Nation's financial community when it comes time to make a financial commitment to small business be it in the form of start up capital, cash-flow extension or increased business expansion. This issue deserves an in depth look not only at what our financial institutions presently do, but also a look at the laws they must conduct business under and the constraints they often are legally confronted with. Only with such a detailed study are we going to be able to positively come to grips with the present situation and develop solutions to withdraw the Federal Government from the present financial situation we find ourselves in with the various programs of the Small Business Administration.

Mr. Speaker there are other important issues facing the small business community and in fact I am now soliciting opinions on legislation in several other areas as well. However from my years of experience with the small business community I believe this bill I am introducing today gets to the core of several important problems and also corresponds fairly directly with the reports of the first two White House Conferences on Small Business.

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO NATIONAL COMPETITION ON THE CONSTITUTION AND THE BILL OF RIGHTS

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to give my heartiest support for the National Bicentennial Competition on the Constitution and Bill of Rights. It is indeed an honor to salute the members of this commission as well as the talented students who participate in this demanding competition.

We must now more than ever encourage the youth of our country to participate and understand the electoral process more thoroughly. This understanding is critical in order for the citizens of this great country to truly enjoy representation in our local, State, and Federal Government. I commend the bicentennial commission and the citizenship and law related education center for doing just this. By stressing the Constitution and the values of government, the commission and the education center enhance our youth's understanding of civic responsibility and the moral foundations first articulated by our Founding Fathers.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my congratulations as well as my personal thanks to all those who contributed their time, skills, and dedication to make this event possible. Each student and member of the commission and education center is to be saluted for all your tireless efforts. Please accept my best wishes for your continued successes.

OPPOSITION TO COMMISSION'S RECOMMENDED PAY INCREASE FOR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, today the 101st Congress meets for the first time. I cannot think of a more appropriate subject to address than the proposed congressional pay raise.

The Commission on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Salaries recently recommended that Federal judges, Members of Congress, Cabinet members, and other high-level Federal executives receive a pay increase of approximately 50 percent. For Members of the House of Representatives, that would mean an increase from $89,500 to $135,000.

President Reagan may accept the Commission's recommendation in full and submit a 50-percent pay raise to Congress or he may modify the Commission recommendation or he may reject it completely. Whatever the President's decision, under current law, Congress has 30 days to block the President's action or the pay raise automatically takes effect. I do not know what the President will decide. But, I do know that now is the time to speak up in opposition to an unwarranted pay increase.

A $45,500 pay increase for Members of Congress is simply overreaching. Mr. Speaker, when I consider that our proposed pay raise alone is higher than the median average income in the United States, I must conclude that the raise is excessive and is unacceptable to the American people.

Aside from the level of the pay increase, the back-door method of gaining pay increases has to raise more than a few eyebrows. Getting automatic pay raises without even being required to vote on them looks somewhat shifty to the average American, and I cannot blame them for feeling that way. Shirking our duty to vote in the full view of the public tarnishes even legitimate pay increases.

To bring the whole issue of congressional pay raises out into the open, I would propose two changes to the current procedure. First, Members of Congress should be required to vote on every pay raise. No more automatic increases should go into effect. Second, any pay raise approved should not go into effect until after the next election cycle, In delaying the pay raise until after the next election, Congress would give the American people the opportunity to approve or to disapprove its decision to increase its own pay.

However, these procedural reforms which I have suggested come too late for the current proposed pay raise. So, Mr. Speaker, I feel I must publicly state my opposition to the pay increase recommended by the Commission. If the President decides to adopt the Commission's recommendation, I would strongly oppose the increase. Mr. Speaker, I would urge you to schedule a vote on the pay raise and not to allow an excessive raise to slip through automatically. From all indications I have received, the House will not be ready for substantive business before the week of January 30, 1989. However, I urge a vote on the pay raise as soon thereafter as possible.

CONGRESSMAN STEVE BARTLETT INTRODUCES THE INDEPENDENT LIVING TRUSTS AND CONTRIBUTION ACT OF 1989

HON. STEVE BARTLETT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, today Congressman MATSUI and I are introducing legislation which will allow parents and families to assist their disabled family member without jeopardizing that individual's eligibility for or amount of benefits under the Supplemental Security Income [SSI] Program.

I became aware of a problem in this area when parents in my congressional district told me of their concern to provide for their disabled child once they have passed away. Currently, a disabled individual can lose SSI benefits along with health insurance benefits if they inherit from their parents. The disabled individual must "spend down" his inheritance before he can again become eligible for SSI benefits. During this period, the SSI recipient loses Medicaid benefits which are essential to the individual. The result has been that many parents have no other choice but to disinherit their disabled child so that these basic benefits will not be lost.

In working out a solution to this problem, I also discovered that parents and family members cannot provide certain services, such as assistance in rent payments, while they are living without that assistance being deducted from the disabled individual's SSI benefit. For example, if a parent wants to give his disabled son or daughter $50 every month to help his child pay his rent at a group home, the Social Security Administration will deduct that $50 from the disabled individual's SSI benefit each month.

Many parents and families would like to assist their family members who have disabilities without that individual losing his eligibility for SSI benefits. These parents and families are only seeking to privately supplement SSI benefits; they are not seeking to obtain additional Federal dollars for their family member. Rather, these parents and families seek an opportunity to use their own funds to assist the disabled individual without risking that person's basis of support. These parents and families want a clearer, more understandable, and reliable set of criteria for long-term planning. This bill will provide that understanding.

Under this legislation, contributions from family members or others would not be counted as income for purposes of eligibility or benefit computation when those contributions are made to provide services in these areas: Social services, vocational rehabilitation, private medical coverage, educational services, personal assistance or attendant care services, clothing, or subsidies for housing such as rent or mortgage payments. In addition, a family can create a trust to provide these same services and that trust will not be counted as an asset or as income to the SSI recipient.

For housing assistance, a $7,200 yearly cap is placed on the amount that could be excluded from income in making eligibility or benefit level determinations This amount is the total of amounts received by the person and used within 30 days for the purposes of paying the rent, the mortgage, property taxes, repair and maintenance bills, and other home-related costs or amounts placed into a home maintenance account. The home maintenance account must be established for the benefit of the individual at a financial institution. Any portion of the excluded funds which remain in the account at the end of the year will be counted as part of the total amount that the individual can have available in the next year.

Under this bill, a parent or family member can supplement his disabled family member's rent at a group home or apartment, provide an attendant to help the disabled individual get dressed or assist in hygiene care, or provide transportation services so the disabled individual can go to the grocery store. Allowing such services to be provided will assure the parent that his disabled family member will continue the same lifestyle as if the parent were alive or give the parent or family member the opportunity to provide such services during his lifetime.

Most importantly, this legislation does not add new benefits or expend more tax dollars. This bill merely allows private dollars to be used by private citizens to assist their disabled family member.

This legislation will give parents and families a clearer understanding of those areas in which they can make contributions without adversely affecting the disabled individual's basic support system. It will allow more people with disabilities to live independently with private assistance from their families as well as the Federal benefits which form the basis of their support. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this bill.

THE CORPORATE RAIDER TAX ACT OF 1989

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation in response to the recent wave of mega-mergers, especially hostile takeovers.

The scope of mergers and acquisitions is large and complex. Over the last 3 years there have been over 15,000 deals, aggregating over $750 billion. In 1987 alone total merger and acquisition activity amounted to over $225 billion, and about a tenth of this involved hostile takeovers. While hostile deals were small in number, they were large in dollar terms and large in the negative impact on our economy and society as a whole.

I'm convinced that this orgy of mergers and acquisitions does not serve the public interest. This paper warfare hurts most Americans and enriches a small minority. Those who benefit are the raiders, investment bankers, and merger lawyers. The rest of us lose, because these deals seldom make companies more efficient and competitive. This merger activity simply diverts billions of dollars that could be better spent on research and development or new production facilities. The takeover process results in higher debt levels leaving companies vulnerable to bankruptcy in the event of a recession. Finally, mergers increase concentration in the economy, which reduces competition.

If we continue to allow this paper warfare to be fought without congressional intervention, we will be making an egregious mistake. It's time that Congress stepped in an began writing some of the rules of this warfare.

The Corporate Raider Tax Act of 1989 deals with one troublesome aspect of this larger merger issue, the tax treatment of certain hostile takeovers. The bill disallows the deductibility of interest on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry stock acquired as part of a hostile qualified stock purchase. It also requires that the purchaser of stock in any hostile stock purchase be treated under the Tax Code as if the acquired corporation had sold all its assets for their fair market value and then liquidated.

It's time that Congress acted to protect American workers and the American economy from the greed of raiders. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this legislation.

The text of the bill follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Corporate Raider Tax Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. SECTION 338 ELECTION DEEMED MADE IN CASE OF HOSTILE QUALIFIED STOCK PURCHASES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 338 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to certain stock purchases treated as asset acquisitions) is amended by redesignating subsection (i) as subsection (j) and by inserting after subsection (h) the following new subsection:

"(i) ELECTION DEEMED MADE WHERE HOSTILE QUALIFIED STOCK PURCHASE.—

THE NATIONAL PUBLIC WORKS CORPORATION

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, the legislation that I introduced today is one important answer to the growing need for a mechanism to finance public facilities with a minimum drain on Federal spending and a high degree of capital leveraging. The Nation's ability to encourage the expansion of business and the development of new industries is constrained by the difficulty of delivering public services. Economic productivity cannot increase if our public facilities are unable to support growth.

Just to maintain our current level of public services over the next 20 years—without any major new expansion in the economy—it is estimated that we would need to spend between $1 and $3 trillion. In a report issued last year, the National Council on Public Works Improvement recommended that total public investment must double if we're to match expected growth. At the same time, however, State and local governments are still in the best position for determining project priorities that address the most serious and immediate challenges confronting their economic development.

The Federal Government dominates public works investment policy by financing about half the outlays on our country's civilian infrastructure. Unfortunately, the assistance is usually in the form of rigid categorical grants that are funded and designed according to national priorities, with very little money available from flexible sources. Once a project is completed with categorical grant funding, no recoupment of Federal funds is possible unless the funds were misspent. Trust funds that generate user fees are the exception to this rule.

Mr. Speaker, I propose a new legislative approach that combines the flexibility of block-grant funding with the advantages of a guaranteed stream of revenue.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A CORPORATION

The bill establishes a National Public Works Corporation that could leverage up to $50 billion in capital for public facilities when fully funded by Federal and State Governments. The Corporation is to be composed of a bipartisan board of directors. The revenues from a fraction of the interest on loans to State and local governments would be used to pay for administrative costs and salaries. The quasi-independent corporation's review of projects would be limited to: First, financial matters of integrity on the institution's reserves and loan portfolio; and second, the technical and competitive aspects of projects. The determination of investment levels and priorities rests with the states.

CAPITALIZATION AND RESERVE FUND

The initial capitalization of the Corporation authorizes $2.5 billion from the Federal Government, to be matched by $2.5 billion from participating States. The combined amounts of actual appropriations and State contributions constitutes a 10-percent reserve requirement for the Corporation. The total amount of outstanding loans may exceed 10 times the amount of reserves. These loans will be financed through the issuance of bonds with the full faith and credit of the Federal Government as a guarantee.

Although States must initially match the Federal contribution on a dollar-for-dollar basis, they ultimately would be permitted to leverage 20 times that amount in project loan funds. Moreover, the States could determine their own contribution schedules, because their fiscal capabilities may vary.

Participation in the Corporation is voluntary. The State chooses the amount and time of contributions. The maximum contribution is limited to the amount that bears the same ratio to $2.5 billion as the State's population bears to the national population. For example, a State with 10 percent of the country's population may contribute up to $250 million. The Federal Government matches the contribution with an equal amount. If fully capitalized, the State is then entitled to loans of up to $5 billion, depending upon the State's contribution. As the loans are repaid, the States are entitled to second generation funds for further loans—an advantage over categorical grant programs.

LOANS TO STATES AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT

The Corporation is authorized to make loans to participating States and to units of government within those States. The loan may be less than the total cost of the project, if other sources of funds are committed from Federal and State grants, local contributions and private donations. The funds are generally available for the construction, reconstruction, rehabilitation, or repair of any public facility. However, the repayment of the loan and the operation, maintenance, and replacement costs of the project must be tied to a guaranteed stream of revenues for the use of the facility.

The interest rate on the loan is based upon the cost of borrowing funds and the corporation's administrative costs. Interest rates may be reduced across the board through a direct appropriation by Congress. This authority is to be used when high interest rates would make the cost of loans from the Corporation an inordinate burden on borrowers.

The Corporation may only approve loans that have the approval of the Governor of a participating State. The board shall ensure that the project is technically feasible and that awards are made on the basis of competitive bidding. The Corporation is granted further powers to audit the borrower's compliance with the loan requirements and to take remedial actions.

DEFAULTS

In the event of a default on the loan by a State and local government, half of the amount of the default would be charged against the State's reserves. A State may replenish its reserves within 2 years, but after that time, the amount of potential loans in the future would be substantially reduced. The reserves are vitally important for maintaining the creditworthiness of the Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is not intended to be a complete answer to the financing of our infrastructure needs, but it can be an important step in addressing a large part of the problem. The setting of priorities rests with the States. Although the Federal Government will be engaging in a new credit-lending activity, several provisions in the bill contain strong assurances that loan guarantees to bond investors carry as little risk as possible against loan defaults. I believe that this legislation will provide Congress with an opportunity to address the growing infrastructure crisis in the years ahead in a cost effective manner.

POLITICAL FREEDOM FOR FEDERAL AND POSTAL EMPLOYEES

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I am joined today by my colleague and fellow Post Office and Civil Service Committee member, Representative FRANK HORTON, in introducing the Federal Employees' Political Activities Act of 1989. We are continuing the bipartisan effort that was forged in the last Congress to restore to 3 million Federal employees the right to freely participate in this Nation's political process, a right enjoyed by all other citizens.

The legislation we are introducing is identical to H.R. 3400 which passed the House in the last Congress by an overwhelming vote of 305 to 112. The Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs reported out a similar bill which was offered as an amendment to the D.C. appropriations bill in the Senate. Because the Senate was acting under a time constraint to complete all appropriations measures by a midnight deadline, there was not sufficient time to fully debate the Hatch Act reform amendment and it was subsequently tabled.

I believe that this legislation has received sufficient study and deliberation. The 50-year-old Hatch Act, well intended as it may have been, is outdated and in need of reform. A review of the circumstances surrounding the enactment of the Hatch Act in 1939 leads to the inevitable conclusion that the legislation was a congressional overreaction to fear of the growing influence of President Franklin D. Roosevelt during a period of rapid growth of the Federal bureaucracy. It was an overreaction by the Congress to abuses, not of voluntary political activity, but to coercion and kickbacks by employees and recipients in Federal relief programs. At that time, less than 32 percent of the Federal work force of 950,000 was under the classified merit system. Today's Federal work force has approximately 3 million employees of which 78.6 percent are covered by the merit system. Today, we have a well-entrenched merit system that protects both employees and the public from political influence and abuse.

Our bill seeks to modify the Hatch Act by permitting Federal employees the right to participate voluntarily in political activities so long as those activities do not even appear to compromise the integrity of the merit system or the impartial administration of the functions of our government.

The following is a summary of the bill:

States that it is the policy of the Congress that employees should be encouraged to fully exercise their right to participate or not participate in the political processes of the Nation. The exercise of this right should be free and without fear of reprisal or penalty.

The bill contains a prohibition against on-the-job political activity. Federal employees cannot engage in any political activity while on duty, in a Federal facility, in the uniform of a Federal job, or while using any vehicle owned or leased by the Government. The rule against on-the-job political activity applies to most employees in executive agencies and to employees in the competitive service not in the executive branch.

The bill also contains prohibitions against official coercion. Federal employees cannot use official authority or influence to interfere with the result of an election or to intimidate any individual to vote or not to vote, to give or withhold a contribution, or to engage or not engage in any political activity. Federal employees may not use official information for any political purpose, unless the information is available to the public. Federal employees may not give a political contribution to a superior, or give, receive, or solicit a political contribution in a Government building. Federal employees may not solicit, accept, or receive a contribution from, or give a political contribution to, a person who has or is seeking a contract with the employee's agency, is regulated by the agency, or has interests which may be affected by the performance of the employee's duties. The various criminal prohibitions relating to elections and political activities contained in chapter 29 of title 18 of the United States Code, are conformed.

Other than these restrictions, Federal employees can engage in any legal political activity off the job. They may run for partisan political office without taking leave, as long as the campaigning does not interfere with the performance of their duties. An employee who requests leave without pay or annual leave for the purpose of running for office can only be denied such leave by agency management based on the exigencies of the public business.

The special counsel of the Merit Systems Protection Board is authorized to issue regulations and to enforce the administrative prohibitions concerning political activity. Actions brought by the special counsel would be brought under the general disciplinary action procedures of 5 U.S.C. 1207. The Merit Systems Protection Board could impose any penalty provided by that section.

Federal employees deserve the same constitutional protection of the right to free speech and association as is afforded all other Americans. The bill we are introducing today returns these inalienable rights to these dedicated individuals.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO ALLOW DEDUCTION FOR MAKING HOMES ACCESSIBLE TO THE HANDICAPPED

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today to help individuals make their homes more accessible to the handicapped. Under existing tax laws, businesses are able to deduct the costs of making establishments more accessible to the handicapped, but in most cases, that same benefit is unavailable to individual taxpayers.

In general, any trade or business that takes steps to make its establishment more accessible to the handicapped is able to deduct those costs in the year incurred. Despite a fundamental income tax principle that capital expenditures must be amortized over the useful life of the property being constructed or improved, the tax laws allow costs associated with making a trade or business accessible to the handicapped deductible in the year incurred.

Unfortunately, individual taxpayers are not able to qualify for as generous a benefit. Generally, expenses incurred to remove architectural barriers to the handicapped are deductible as medical expenses. However, medical expenses are subject to a 7½-percent "floor": in other words, medical expenses must exceed 7½ percent of taxpayer's adjusted gross income before they are deductible—and even then, only the excess over that amount is deductible.

In addition, it is not clear what costs of removing architectural barriers are allowable. Prior to 1986, the Internal Revenue Service had generally taken the position that for an expense to be allowable as a medical expense deduction, it must have been an essential element of treatment and must not have been otherwise incurred for nonmedical reasons. The 1986 Tax Reform Act clarified and liberalized this standard, generally by allowing certain capital expenses designed to make a taxpayer's residence more accessible to the handicapped a qualified medical expense deduction. (See, S. Rept. 99–313, p. 59).

In response to the 1986 act amendments, the Service issued Rev. Rul. 87–106, IRB 1987–43, which listed 13 examples of qualified expenses which would be allowed as a medical expense deduction if used to make a home more accessible to the handicapped. The Service noted that this list was not exhaustive.

The purpose of my legislation is to allow expenses similar to those listed in Rev. Rul. 87–106 as a deduction, without regard to the 7½-percent floor. Thus, a taxpayer who incurred qualified barrier removal expenditures could deduct those amounts in full. Qualified barrier removal expenditures are expenses incurred which make a taxpayer's principal residence more accessible to, and usable by, the handicapped, as defined by the Service in regulations. It is my intent that the Service would use principles similar to those in Rev. Rul. 87–106 in making this determination.

My bill also makes clear that expenses deducted under the provisions of my legislation would not also be allowed as a medical expense deduction. In addition, the taxpayer would not be able to increase the basis in the property improved by the amount claimed as a deduction under this bill.

Mr. Speaker, it is simply unfair that individual taxpayers cannot get the same benefits as businesses for making their own homes accessible to the handicapped. A parent with a disabled child should not, for example, have to incur expenses exceeding 7½ percent of their adjusted gross income in order to qualify for the limited benefits in the 1986 tax bill. My bill will allow taxpayers—all taxpayers—to claim, as an itemized deduction, any qualified expense to make a residence more accessible to the handicapped. This bill is fair and humane, and I urge my colleagues' support.

SENIORS LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, there are few events sadder than seeing an American family scrimp and save for years only to be impoverished overnight when one spouse goes into a nursing home. The elderly have resorted to increasingly desperate measures to pay for long-term care.

Millions of older Americans are waiting now for elected officials to act to fill what is unquestionably the greatest gap in Medicare—funding for long-term care. While my legislation does not address all of our concerns, it does open the door a little bit wider so that insurers can offer more affordable private policies to more people.

A little over a year ago, a special task force on private long-term health care policies gave me several recommendations for improving seniors' access to long-term care. The legislation I am introducing today reflects one of these recommendations because it will alleviate some of the stumbling blocks to offering private insurance by clarifying that long-term care insurance reserves are the same as other-tax-exempt insurance reserves.

The world of private long-term care insurance has been relatively unchartered territory. Senior citizens haven't purchased insurance because the few policies available have been costly and have provided limited coverage. Insurers haven't offered more extensive coverage because the market is still undeveloped.

A year in a nursing home can cost $23,000 a year—more than the average family income in this country. Those who save conscientiously for this financial disaster quickly lose a lifetime of savings in less than 6 months. My legislation can help drive down the price of the private insurance, so that seniors can find some relief from the crushing costs of nursing home care.

Private insurance will only begin to fill the enormous demand for long-term care gap. Millions will not be able to afford private coverage. For those individuals, we must continue the search for comprehensive solutions to meet their long-term care needs.

However, private long-term health care insurance should be one part of a national policy to fund long-term care in an aging society. My legislation will serve to strengthen our ability to meet the long-term care needs of all Americans.

MUST-CARRY AND CABLE TELEVISION

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, for some time, I have been a vocal opponent of some of the ways in which the cable industry has used its monopoly power to control 45 million cable subscriber's access to over-the-air broadcasts.

Today, in order to rectify this situation, I am pleased to announce that I am introducing the Cable Subscribers Protection Act of 1989. This legislation is urgently needed to assure our Nation's cable viewers access to all the local, over-the-air broadcast signals which have been licensed by the Federal Government to serve these subscribers as well as folks who only have access to directly broadcast signals.

Due to several court decisions and to negligence on the part of the Federal Communications Commission, America's cable subscribers no longer have the basic protection of a reasonable "must-carry" rule, to assure them access to all local broadcast signals. Since it is unlikely that cable subscribers in any market will soon have the choice of two or more cable operators, it is necessary to protect consumers from the potential abuse of the monopoly power of the cable operator.

The legislation I am introducing today will formally link cable's compulsory license with local station "must-carry" rules. As my colleagues well know, the compulsory license enables cable to take and transmit—without permission and without compensation—the signals of any television station it chooses. The cable operator may then sell the retransmission of these local broadcast signals to cable service subscribers, along with other program packages.

The cable compulsory license is an extraordinary privilege constituting an enormous subsidy to the cable industry—all courtesy of the U.S. Government. In my view, cable does not have a first amendment claim to the compulsory license.

Therefore, the legislation I propose will amend both the Communications Act and the Copyright Act so that only cable systems abiding by reasonable "must-carry" requirements would be eligible for the compulsory license for local signals.

Cable operators who are not willing to treat local stations fairly by carrying them on their systems will not be required to do so, but these operators will also not be able to utilize the compulsory license to carry any local station over-the-air broadcasts.

The "must-carry" requirement a cable operator has to meet is simply the most recent set of rules adopted by the FCC—those which were based on the compromise achieved by cable and broadcast industry negotiators, but overruled by the courts.

In addition, my proposal will end the practice of channel-shifting which many cable operators have used to put local stations at a disadvantage with respect to pay-for-service programming. Local stations will have a preferential voice in cable channel positioning.

One final note—the legislation I propose today will condition compulsory license for carriage on local signals only. I have intentionally excluded distant signals for the simple reason that the time to eliminate compulsory license coverage of distant signals has come.

The FCC's "must-carry" rules were struck down in July 1985. Those rules, which had existed for more than 20 years, merely guaranteed that cable subscribers had access to their local television broadcast stations.

Congress put relentless pressure on the Commission to draw up new rules, which in fact they did, to a large extent based on legislation I introduced in 1985 which moved the various industry participants to achieve a compromise solution, which the FCC adopted in 1986.

It was unfortunate in the extreme that several large cable companies ignored the compromise agreed to by their association representatives and challenged the new rules in court. Again, the court found that the revised rules violated the first amendment rights of cable operators.

Once again, cable operators control the fate of many local broadcasters—especially public and independent stations. We cannot allow this situation to continue.

What I want to do is fix this situation once and for all—before it gets worse and in a manner in which neither the courts nor the FCC can overrule a solution which is clearly in the public interest.

I want to reemphasize my continued concern for the fate of local broadcasters and consumers in an arena now totally controlled by cable operators who directly compete with the over-the-air broadcaster for their share of the audience.

While I am one of free television's most vocal critics when it comes to issues like children's programming, I still strongly believe in the promise and responsibility of local broadcasters to serve their communities.

Local broadcasts—both radio and television—are the most democratic of all means of mass communications. These broadcast stations provide every American—in every community—with vast amounts of information and entertainment programming every day at absolutely no charge.

Local over-the-air broadcast is truly a universal service available to virtually everyone with very little regard for income and no regard for social status. Cable service—even if it does provide some very worthwhile additional programming—clearly is not a universal service. With average prices in the range of $20 per month, millions of lower income Americans do not now—and will not in the foreseeable future—have access to cable television.

Therefore, it is very important that free TV continue to be a dynamic communications force in this country. Since over 45 million Americans today depend on cable for their television reception, we as communications policymakers simply cannot allow the local cable operator—who controls this reception pipeline—to determine which local free TV stations reach those subscribers and which stations do not.

Cable now reaches 50 percent of all U.S. homes. It is obvious that few local stations which do not have cable channel positions will long survive. The demise of local stations because they are not carried on cable would constitute a loss not only to cable subscribers, but to the over-the-air television audience for whom local stations are their only source of television news, information, and entertainment.

While cable systems once happily carried every local station, this situation has changed as cable has emerged as a direct competitor of broadcast television. Today, a typical cable system has sales people on the street selling advertising time on cable programs directly opposite local station programming.

Competition, as a rule, is beneficial to consumers. Competition which is beneficial must also be fair, because, in the competition which pits over-the-air television stations against cable operators, it is not cable subscribers alone who are impacted by an operator's programming decisions, but nonsubscribers as well.

When cable systems may drop local stations—be they public, network affiliates, or independent stations—in order to increase the audience share for paid cable services, then something must be done to protect the public interest and the consumers—for whom we are the ultimate guardians.

The legislation I am introducing will rectify the current untenable situation. I welcome my colleagues' support for this proposal.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Cable Subscriber Protection Act of 1989".

"COMPLIANCE WITH MUST-CARRY REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 640. (a) A cable system complies with the requirements of this section if the Federal Communications Commission certifies that the cable system—

"(1) carries, as part of the basic tier of cable service regularly provided to all subscribers at the minimum charge and to each television receiver on which subscribers receive cable service, in full and in their entirety, the signals of television broadcast stations in accordance with sections 76.5 and 76.51 through 76.62 of title 47 of the Code of Federal Regulations as in effect on December 10, 1987; and

"(2) carries each such station on the cable channel on which it was carried on July 19, 1985, or on the channel number assigned to such station by the Commission, at the election of the television broadcast station, or on such other cable channel as may be acceptable to the television broadcast station.

"(b) The requirements of this section shall not be subject to an expiration date.".

(c) DEFINITION OF LOCAL SERVICE AREA.—Section 111(f) of title 17, United States Code, is amended by striking out the fourth paragraph (containing the definition of local service area of a primary transmitter) and inserting the following:

"The 'local service area of a primary transmitter,' in the case of a television broadcast station, comprises: (1) the area in which such station is entitled to insist upon its signal being retransmitted by a cable system pursuant to the rules, regulations, and authorizations of the Federal Communications Commission in effect on April 15, 1976, or (2) the area extending 50 air miles from the reference point (as defined in 76.53 of title 47, Code of Federal Regulations) of the station's community of license, if the cable system's principal headend is located within such area, or (3) the area of dominant influence in which the station is located, as demarcated in the ARB Television Market Analysis for the most recent year (or, if the ARB Television Market Analysis ceased to be published, such equivalent area as shall be determined by the Register of Copyrights); or in the case of a television broadcast station licensed by an appropriate governmental authority of Canada or Mexico, the area in which it would be entitled to insist upon its signal being retransmitted if it were a television broadcast station subject to such rules, regulations, and authorizations. The 'local service area of a primary transmitter,' in the case of a radio broadcast station comprises the primary service area of such station, pursuant to the rules and regulations of the Federal Communications Commission.".

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall be effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO IMPROVE HEALTH INSURANCE TO COVER SUBSTANCE ABUSE FOR FEDERAL WORKERS

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation establishing demonstration programs under the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program [FEHBP] to test the cost effectiveness of various substance abuse treatment programs. Under this bill, the Office of Personnel Management [OPM] will work with FEHBP carriers, Federal agencies, and employee organizations to develop several 3-year demonstration programs.

The programs will be offered in one to five geographic locations and will test various substance abuse treatment and rehabilitation models. Inpatient and outpatient treatment, as well as various other services such as child care, may be offered through the demonstration. An independent evaluator will measure both the cost and efficiency of these treatment programs, and the effects of substance abuse treatment on worker productivity.

Mr. Speaker, ever since 1982, when the administration forced extensive cuts in FEHBP, Federal employees and retirees have not had adequate health insurance coverage for drug abuse or alcoholism rehabilitation. In order to fill in the gaps in their insurance coverage, we must find the most effective and cost-efficient treatment methods. This bill will teach us a great deal at a very low cost. It is vital that we act soon so that the FEHBP can meet the health needs of Federal enrollees.

Similar legislation passed the House in 1986 as part of the omnibus drug bill. I thank you for your support then, and I urge you to continue your support for this vital piece of legislation.

IN SUPPORT OF TERMINATING THE EMBARGO AGAINST NICARAGUA

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, along with 15 of my distinguished colleagues, including three senior members of the Foreign Affairs Committee, legislation to terminate the United States trade embargo against Nicaragua.

On May 1, 1985, President Reagan declared a national emergency to deal with the unusual and extraordinary threat to United States national security posed by Nicaragua and imposed an economic embargo against that country. By imposing the sanctions under the International Emergency Economic Powers Act [IEEPA], President Reagan acted unilaterally, without consulting Congress or any of our allies.

Now, over 3 years later, it is clear that the embargo has not achieved any positive results for U.S. interests in the region. Although the Nicaraguan economy is obviously in shambles, United States agencies and private organizations could not produce hard evidence to measure the real economic impact of the trade sanctions themselves at the hearings held by the Subcommittees on Western Hemisphere and International Economic Policy and Trade last Congress.

However, the embargo has had numerous negative consequences for U.S. policy in the region. It has hurt the private sector in Nicaragua, previously pro-American, as well as United States businesses operating in the country. Second, the sanctions have served as an embarrassment to the United States. The move was severely criticized by our allies, and no other nation has joined in imposing similar trade sanctions. Last, Nicaragua's reliance on the Soviet Union over the past years has increased dramatically—exactly the opposite effect of what the administration intended to accomplish. In addition, Nicaragua has effectively dissipated many of the effects of the United States embargo by increasing trade with our allies, including Canada, Japan, and Western European nations.

In its implementation of the trade sanctions, the Reagan administration has once again placed ideology over adherence to even the most minimum moral standards of conduct between nations. It has historically been U.S. policy to provide humanitarian aid to the people of other countries, independent of politics. The International Emergency Economic Powers Act [IEEPA] does not give the President the authority to prohibit private donations of goods intended to be used to relieve human suffering. Unfortunately, last Congress' hearings made clear that since 1985, the administration has acted to thwart the efforts of United States citizen and church groups to provide genuine humanitarian aid to the Nicaraguan people. By adopting an overly restrictive interpretation of the humanitarian exception, the administration has successfully blocked the export of such dangerous items as seeds, pencils, and farm tools.

Whatever its intent, the Reagan administration's policy toward Nicaragua over the last 8 years has added to, not alleviated, the suffering of the Nicaraguan people. The administration's relentless military war has dealt a devastating blow to the Nicaraguan economy, and has brought tragedy and bloodshed to countless innocent Nicaraguans. Just recently, the administration decided not to extend disaster relief to Nicaragua, despite the widespread destruction caused by Hurricane Joan.

This month will bring the beginning of a new—and hopefully more reasonable—administration. A new direction in United States policy toward Central America is desperately needed. Terminating an ineffective, immoral and inhumane policy of economic sanctions against Nicaragua would be a worthwhile first step.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this bill to lift the United States trade embargo against Nicaragua.

H.R.—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the prohibitions on trade and other transactions and activities involving Nicaragua which were established under the International Emergency Economic Powers Act and other laws pursuant to the national emergency declared by the President in Executive Order 12513 of May 1, 1985, shall cease to apply as of the date of enactment of this Act.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT THAT PAN AM 103 WAS THE VICTIM OF SABOTAGE

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, as we now know, the British Aviation Authority has confirmed that the destruction of Pan Am 103 was indeed the result of sabotage. Intense heat damage to the plastic lining of the cargo hold of the aircraft, along with evidence uncovered during autopsies performed on the passengers indicate that an explosive device was responsible for this tragedy.

The deliberate use of terror by governments, political and ethnic groups in the Middle East is of long standing. The rising tide of Islamic fundamentalism, coupled with Palestinian radicalism has made 1988 the bloodiest year yet for terrorist incidents.

Mr. Speaker, the world has had enough of this type of brutality. If culpability for this tragedy rests with state supported groups operating out of such countries as Libya, Syria and Iran, we must make them accountable. Diplomatic channels, economic sanctions, as well as the military option must not be ruled out of order to protect our citizens.

Small, radical nations never risk engaging the United States in a large scale military operation. For this reason they choose to perpetrate surrogate acts of terror—the ambiguous alternative to conventional warfare. It is up to the U.S. Government to remove the ambiguity from our response. The international community must work together to put an end to criminal acts of terror throughout the world. There must be no safe haven for terrorists.

A TRIBUTE TO REGINALD F. MARTIN

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, January 14, 1989, friends and colleagues will gather to pay tribute to Reginald F. Martin upon his retirement as Field Division General Manager/Postmaster in Cleveland, OH. It is a great honor to join in the salute to an outstanding individual and dedicated leader.

Mr. Speaker, Reginald Martin's distinguished career in the U.S. Postal Service spans 37 years. He joined the Postal Service in 1952 as a distribution clerk in the Washington, DC, area. He rose through the ranks and served in a number of key positions within the Postal Service in the Washington, DC, Minneapolis, and Los Angeles areas.

In 1985, Reggie Martin was appointed manager of the northeast Ohio district. As district manager, he directed the operations of 360 post offices, including management sectional centers at Akron, Cleveland, and Youngstown, OH, and mail processing centers at Canton, Mansfield, and Steubenville. In 1986, during realignment of the Postal Service, Mr. Martin took the helm of the Cleveland division—covering a 20-county area of northeastern Ohio and representing annual revenues of over $510 million.

In this capacity, Mr. Martin has proven himself as a person who doesn't change with the times—rather, a progressive thinker who changes before the times. He plays an active role in postal management by getting to know the customers and helping them to meet their needs.

One such need in Cleveland was relief from congested lobbies and crowded parking lots. Mr. Martin felt drive-through windows would alleviate parking problems and improve customer service. The now famous "snorkel box," which comfortably houses a window clerk, is a great success in the Cleveland area and is being considered for implementation nationwide. At one of Cleveland's busiest branch offices, Mr. Martin implemented valet service for local businesses which call for their mail. Business customers who previously had to wait in line now drive through a caller line where clerks retrieve their sacks of mail, thus saving time for all concerned.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of his customer first approach, the Cleveland division has welcomed new postal facilities throughout northeast Ohio. And when capital funds were not available for new construction, Martin's innovative thinking led to the renovation of a supermarket by a team of postal employees. Lakewood, OH, which had waited over 30 years for a larger post office recently received a Christmas gift from Reggie Martin—a beautiful new showcase facility. Mr. Martin and his staff also work closely with the Local Postal Customers' Councils to maintain the high level of customer satisfaction found in the division. Town hall meetings and small, informal business meetings between postal customers and postal officials are held on a regular basis.

But customers are not the only ones to benefit from Mr. Martin's innovative methods. The 14,000 employees of the Cleveland division are fortunate to have Reggie Martin as their leader. He encourages employee and management involvement, strongly supports an affirmative action programs, and fosters a team spirit among his employees.

Mr. Martin is a man of remarkable talent, organizational ability and commitment. Due largely to his efforts, in 1988 we witnessed the renaming of a Cleveland postal station in honor of Cleveland-born Olympic hero, Jesse Owens. Additionally, we were successful in dedicating Cleveland's main postal facility in honor of the late John O. Holly, founder of the Future Outlook League, which was responsible for eliminating discrimination in employment practices in the city over 50 years ago. At this very moment, plans are underway to launch a program to provide clothing for the needy through collections at postal stations throughout the city. Reginald Martin was instrumental in the development of this program and has devoted his time, talent, and staff resources to ensure its success.

Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity to call upon Reggie Martin on numerous occasions for assistance. He is always available and willing to help in any manner possible. Reggie is also a kind and gracious individual.

My staff and I have enjoyed working with him. He is a great asset to the U.S. Postal Service and the city of Cleveland. I will miss working with him.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that my colleagues will join me in saluting Reginald Martin upon his retirement. We extend our best wishes to Reginald, his wife, Barbara, and his family on this occasion.

THE ENTERPRISE ZONE DEVELOPMENT AND EMPLOYMENT ACT OF 1989

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to rise and announce that I am today introducing the "Enterprise Zone Development and Employment Act of 1989," introduced by Congressmen GARCIA and Kemp in the 100th Congress. However, before briefly describing the intent of this important legislation, I would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the support that you have assured me in this effort. In doing so, you have once again demonstrated to the Members of this great body, and to the American people, your deep commitment toward improving the plight of the neglected urban centers in the United States.

The reintroduction of the legislation will, I believe, encourage more private businesses to invest in our inner-city communities all across this country.

Mr. Speaker, I needn't remind you or any Member of this, the 101st Congress, of the need for us to examine and experiment with various approaches to solving the pressing social and economic problems of our metropolitan areas. The creation of enterprise zones has not been enacted in past sessions of Congress because many of us have believed that the Tax Code should not be the primary means of stimulating the economic growth and revitalization of our economically depressed communities. We have believed that the Government should play the primary role through direct intervention to alleviate these problems.

Now we begin a new Congress with the continuing harsh realities of the Federal budget deficit and the constraints of the Gramm-Rudman legislation. But we have a new President and a new Congress, and we envision a new spirit of commitment to cooperation to come together, executive and legislative, Republican and Democrat, to address the problems of the poorest of the poor, the victims of economic and social problems of which they are not responsible.

The Enterprise Zone Development and Employment Act of 1989 provides for the establishment of enterprise zones in order to stimulate the creation of new jobs, particularly for disadvantaged workers and long-term unemployed individuals, and to promote revitalization of economically distressed areas primarily by encouraging or promoting: First, tax relief at the Federal, State, and local levels; second, regulatory relief at the Federal, State, and local levels; and third, improved local services and an increase in the economic stake of enterprise zone residents in their own communities, via increased involvement of private, local, and neighborhood organizations.

The Federal tax incentives that are included in this bill are the main avenues intended to encourage establishment of new enterprises, as well as the expansion of existing ones, thereby, creating new jobs in these urban areas. Jurisdictions will compete for the limited number of zones by means of local incentive packages, such as relief from taxes or regulations, or improved services or infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, although I realize that this legislation will not by any means cure all of the ills of inner cities, I do believe that it represents a valid attempt to forge a coalition between the Federal Government and the private sector to jointly address these pressing social and economic problems.

A DEATH IN BRAZIL

HON. DAVID R. OBEY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to bring to my colleagues attention a New York Times editorial written by Tom Wicker regarding the recent murder in Brazil of Francisco Mendes Filho, an Amazonian labor leader who worked diligently and unselfishly to save one of the world's greatest resources, the Brazilian Amazon rain forest.

Mendes was recently recognized by the United Nations Environment Program as one of the world's top 500 ecology leaders, and he was instrumental in bringing about changes in the way international lending institutions finance dangerous road projects in the Amazon. Mr. Mendes struggled during his lifetime to advocate and organize workers practicing rubber tapping, an occupation which allows for sustainable economic growth using the great resources of the Amazon without exploitation. Under his leadership, rubber tappers in the western Amazon were successfully organized to work against the shortsighted bulldozing of the rain forest for cattle-raising operations.

It's tragic that Mr. Mendes was gunned down, allegedly by killers who were envious of his success in getting the Brazilian government to declare reserves for rubber tappers in the forest.

The world will miss this far-sighted individual and will be watching Brazil to ensure that not only will Chico Mendes' work be carried on, but also that his killers will be swiftly brought to justice.

His work was as important to us in the Northern Hemisphere as it was to those Brazilian rubber tappers because all of us, as biological creatures, are intimately reliant on a delicately balanced global environment which he worked to preserve.

The editorial follows:

[From the New York Times, Dec. 27, 1988]

A DEATH IN BRAZIL

The shot that killed Francisco Mendes Filho last week in Brazil may not have been heard round the world, though it was reported on page 1 of The New York Times. But Mr. Mendes's violent death may at least further alert global authorities to the dangers of deforestation—an environmental abuse he fought so effectively that he may have been murdered by the land exploiters he opposed.

Mr. Mendes was a founder and organizer of the union of rubber tappers, whose traditional—and environmentally sound—way of life in the Amazon jungle was threatened by indiscriminate land clearance. At his death, he was the most prominent leader of the rubber tappers, the recognized national spokesman for their interests and the recipient of a Global 500 award from the U.N. Environmental Project for his work in forest protection.

His life had been threatened, he said recently, by local landowners and he was under police protection, which proved insufficient, at the moment he was killed. In the remote regions of the Amazon, such violence is not unusual, and Mr. Mendes had made enemies with his determined battle against further destruction of the tropical forest. He and his followers were credited with saving literally thousands of hectares from the bulldozer. (A hectare is about 2.5 acres.)

But far more of Brazil's rich "tropical moist forest" is gone forever—lost not just to the rubber tappers who "harvested" it without damaging or exploiting it, but to the wildlife whose habitat and ecosystems have been destroyed, to the food and timber uses it might have served and to populations all over the world who depend on the chlorophyllic action of plants and trees to keep the earth's atmosphere from excessive pollution.

That dependence is rapidly becoming precarious. Emissions of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere have increased in recent years from about 1.5 billion tons annually to more than five billion tons. In the first half of the 21st century, carbon dioxide concentration in the air will be about double that of pre-industrial times; that will contribute heavily to the so-called "greenhouse effect," expected to raise the earth's temperatures.

Francisco Mendes thus fought not only the rubber tappers' battle, but the whole planet's. Moreover, the assault to which he responded in the far-off jungles of the Amazon was not merely the product of shortsighted Brazilian development policies. It resulted also from the rising demand in the United States for cheap beef to make the Big Macs and Whoppers on which the new fast-food industry was thriving. Pasture-fed cattle from Latin America were an economical alternative to grain-fed beef from North America.

So Brazil embarked on a self-destructive course: tax credits, exemptions and deductions, as well as subsidized loans, for private entrepreneurs to invest in cattle ranching. Inevitably, these economic seductions led to the large-scale conversion of forest land to pasture—though the forest was far more valuable, inherently and perhaps even economically, than pasture. Between 1965 and 1983, 469 large cattle ranches, averaging 23,000 hectares each, were established in the Amazon region. Twenty-five percent of this land—by my calculation, about 10,517 square miles—actually was cleared by 1983.

The result, through 1983, was a $2.5 billion government investment, in effect subsidizing irredeemable deforestation and land degradation. For most of the entrepreneurs

Mr. Mendes fought so hard, profits were immense.

Brazil is by no means the only offender. Every year, throughout the world, about 11 million acres of tropical forests and woodlands are destroyed—mostly to clear land for agriculture to feed growing populations, or to supply exchange-earning exports. At present rates of loss, by the end of the decade 2007-2017, several countries will have destroyed all their forests: Nigeria, the Ivory Coast, Sri Lanka, Costa Rica, El Salvador.

Thus the kind of fight that Mr. Mendes waged literally to his death was of concern far beyond the Amazon—as are ozone depletion, acid rain, toxic wastes, desertification, ocean spoilage, diminishing resources, rising population and numerous other impending crises.

No more serious problems face George Bush, as he prepares to become President, with all the influence that office can exert on world development and conservation practices. Mr. Bush has made a good start with his nomination of William Reilly to head the Environmental Protection Agency. But even so experienced an environmentalist can have real impact on these global problems only if they are given the highest priority by a President as determined, in his way, as Francisco Mendes Filho was in his.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION REQUIRING PHYSICIANS TO ACCEPT ASSIGNMENT

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today to provide an important measure of financial protection in the field of health care costs for America's elderly. My legislation, if enacted, could save Medicare beneficiaries as much as $5.1 billion in health care costs.

Mr. Speaker, under present law, the Medicare Program reimburses physicians under one of two methods. Under both methods, Medicare generally reimburses 80 percent of the reasonable charge for the procedure.[1] A physician may bill the patient directly for the procedure, in which case the patient is reimbursed 80 percent of the reasonable charge by the Medicare Program. Alternatively, the patient may assign his right to reimbursement to the physician, in which case the physician collects 80 percent of the reasonable charge from the Medicare Program and the remaining 20 percent from the patient. Under this second method of reimbursement (the "assignment method"), the physician is prohibited from billing the patient beyond the reasonable charge for the procedure.

The following example illustrates how the system works. Two Medicare beneficiaries go to two different physicians. One physician accepts assignment; the other does not. Both patients undergo a procedure, the Medicare reasonable charge for which is $500. The physician who accepts assignment will receive $400 from the Medicare Program and may bill the patient for the remaining $100.

The other physician may, essentially, charge whatever he wishes for the procedure. Thus, if the physicial billed the patient $1,000, the patient would pay the physician the full amount and the patient would be reimbursed only $400 from the Medicare Program. The first patient has out-of-pocket expenses of only $100; the second patient has out-of-pocket expenses of $600—both for the same procedure.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, this happens all too much. My bill would require physicians to accept the assignment method of reimbursement. There is no reason why a physician should charge a patient more than the Medicare-determined reasonable charge. As I mentioned, this legislation would save Medicare beneficiaries as much as $5.1 billion without costing the Federal Government a dime. It would be a true measure of protection from catastrophic medical expenses, and I urge prompt action on this legislation by the Committee on Ways and Means.

[1] Under the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act (P.L. 100-360), the Medicare program will reimburse 100 percent of the reasonable cost for a procedure after a beneficiary incurs $1,370 in Part B charges. However, the program will still not reimburse for amounts in excess of the reasonable charge.

NATIONAL OIL SECURITY POLICY ACT OF 1989

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, the National Oil Security Policy Act of 1989, addresses the critical need to establish a national security-oriented energy policy, especially in response to the current oil price collapse and the continuing devastation of our domestic energy production industry.

This measure calls for a national energy policy that would limit our dependence on foreign oil to 50 percent of domestic oil consumption, requiring the President to annually assess U.S. oil production, demand, and imports for the subsequent 3 years. If the evaluation shows that foreign oil dependence will exceed the 50 percent level, the President would then be required, within 90 days, to present Congress with a plan to prevent further dependence on foreign oil through production incentives, renewable energy proposals, an oil import fee, or any other appropriate measures.

Congress would then have 90 days to accept, modify, or reject the plan by passing a joint resolution.

The extent to which this Nation has grown to depend upon insecure foreign sources of petroleum is alarming. Last year, petroleum imports averaged over 6 million barrels per day—close to 40 percent of domestic demand. Not since 1980 have petroleum imports reached such a significant percentage of demand.

We are all aware of the volatility of oil in the international arena. We are again becoming increasingly dependent for critical energy sources on nations which will not hesitate to artificially control price, supply, and even availability—nations which have selfishly demonstrated in the past that they do not have the best interests of the United States, or the stability of the world economy, at heart.

In order to ensure the viability of our domestic oil production industry, I have introduced legislation today to keep us from growing more dependent on foreign energy sources, and I invite my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important measure.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Oil Security Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the United States is the leader of the free world and has world wide responsibilities to promote economic and political security;

(2) the exercise of traditional responsibilities here and abroad in foreign policy requires that the United States be free of the risk of energy blackmail in times of shortages;

(3) the level of the United States oil security is directly related to the level of domestic production of oil, natural gas liquids, and natural gas;

(4) a national energy policy should be developed which ensures that adequate supplies of oil shall be available at all times free of the threat of embargo or other foreign hostile acts; and

(5) the ability of the United States to exercise its free will and to carry out its responsibilities as leader of the free world could be jeopardized by an excessive dependence on foreign oil imports.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to establish a national energy security policy designated to limit United States dependence of foreign oil supplies.

SEC. 3. DUTIES OF THE PRSIDENT.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF CEILING.—The President shall establish a National Oil Import Ceiling (referred to in this Act as the "ceiling level") which shall represent a ceiling level beyond which foreign crude and oil product imports as a share of United States oil consumption shall not rise.

(b) LEVEL OF CEILING.—The ceiling level established under subsection (a) shall not exceed 50 percentum of United States crude and oil product consumption for any annual period.

(c) REPORT.—(1) The President shall prepare and submit an annual report to Congress containing a national oil security projection (in this Act referred to as the "projection"), which shall contain a forecast of domestic oil and NGL demand and production, and imports of crude and oil product for the subsequent three years. The projection shall contain appropriate adjustments for expected price and production changes.

(2) The projection prepared pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be presented to Congress with the Budget. The President shall certify whether foreign crude and oil product imports will exceed the ceiling level during the next three years.

SEC. 4. CONGRESSIONAL REVIEW.

The Congress shall have ten continuous session days after submission of each projection to review the projection and make a determination whether the ceiling level will be violated within three years. Unless disapproved or modified by joint resolution, the Presidential certification shall be binding ten session days after being submitted to Congress.

SEC. 5. ENERGY PRODUCTION AND OIL SECURITY ACTIONS.

ENERGY PRODUCTION AND OIL SECURITY POLICY.—(1) Upon certification that the ceiling level will be exceeded, the President is required within ninety days to submit an Energy Production and Oil Security Policy (in this Act referred to as the "policy") to Congress. The policy shall prevent crude and product imports exceeding the National Oil Import Ceiling. Unless disapproved or modified by joint resolution, the policy shall be effective ninety session days after being submitted to Congress.

(2) The Energy Production and Oil Security Policy may include—

(A) oil import fee;

(B) energy conservation actions including improved fuel efficiency for automobiles;

(C) expansion of the Strategic Petroleum Reserves to maintain a ninety-day cushion against projected oil import blockages; and

(D) production incentives for domestic oil and gas including tax and other incentives for stripper well production, offshore, frontier, and other oil produced with tertiary recovery techniques.

THE INTRODUCTION OF THE FEDERAL EMPLOYEES HEALTH CARE FREEDOM-OF-CHOICE ACT

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation designed to lower the cost of health care in the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program [FEHBP] and stop discrimination against health professionals. My bill, the Federal Employees Health Care Freedom-of-Choice Act, will guarantee direct access to health care providers for enrollees in the FEHBP.

Freedom of choice is a hallmark of the FEHBP. As the largest employer-sponsored group health program in the world, the FEHBP includes almost 300 plans, offering employees a wide range of options for meeting their health insurance needs.

Freedom of choice is important within plans, as well. However, those Federal employees enrolled in fee-for-service plans do not always have direct access to the qualified health providers of their choice. Currently, FEHBP plans may refuse to reimburse a licensed professional who provides a health care service, simply because that professional is not a physician.

To remedy this problem, I have reintroduced the Federal Employees Health Care Freedom-of-Choice Act. This legislation requires insurance plans in the FEHBP to reimburse nurses, nurse practitioners, nurse midwives, clinical social workers, marriage and family therapists, and chiropractors for covered services. The health practitioners must be licensed in their States to provide the covered health services and must operate within the scope of their practice in order to be reimbursed. Public witnesses testifying in congressional hearings on this topic have stressed repeatedly that such adherence to State law is vital for ensuring continued quality of health care.

Expanded access to health providers increases the likelihood that FEHBP will be able to find the health care they need. This is especially crucial in areas of mental health care and primary care, in which Federal employees' health needs may not always be met. In addition, a greater choice among providers will also promote cost effectiveness within the FEHBP. Often, nonphysician providers charge fees lower than those of physicians. Finally, expanded access to providers will be important to individuals in medically underserved areas, where insufficient access and choice have threatened the quality of health care.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is the result of years of careful study and deliberation. In 1987 Congress voted to require the Office of Personnel Management [OPM] to study the feasibility of direct reimbursement to nonphysicians under the FEHBP. In its study, the OPM reported that it independently encourages FEHBP insurance carriers to allow direct access to a variety of qualified health care providers. Currently, a number of FEHBP already permit such access to nurse-midwives, clinical social workers, chiropractors, and other providers. Furthermore, the OPM study noted the success of the medically underserved areas experiment, in which direct access to nonphysician providers was guaranteed. This program was important for assuring that quality health care would be available in medically underserved areas. OPM concluded that, based on this experiment, direct access would not increase program costs.

In addition to the OPM study, the Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits has held hearings on direct access and the OPM report. Witnesses before the subcommittee agreed that any direct access law for the FEHBP should recognize State statutes licensing health care providers and regulating the practice of medicine. These State laws protect the quality of health care by ensuring that providers practice according to accepted guidelines and meet professional standards.

Consequently, the bill I am introducing today includes language which restates and strengthens current policy that Federal law governing the FEHBP shall not override State or local laws which relate to the licensing of certification of practice medicine, nursing, or another health profession. FEHBP insurance plans may not, however, impose their own requirements on practitioners in addition to those mandated by law. To do so restricts freedom of choice, inhibits competition, and denies Federal employees access to health care providers.

The freedom of choice promoted by my legislation will also help control health costs under the FEHBP. A report by the Congressional Budget Office has concluded that enactment of this reform would have no significant impact on the Federal budget. In addition, the budgets of State and local governments would not be directly affected. CBO confirmed our premise that the provision of direct reimbursement will not raise costs.

It is important to remember, Mr. Speaker, that my bill mandates expanded access to providers, but does not require expanded health care services. This legislation would enhance choice, a simple, yet fundamental improvement that would benefit all FEHBP enrollees. Through this legislation, FEHBP enrollees will enjoy broader access to quality health care at no additional cost.

This idea is not new. Identical legislation passed the House in recent years by unanimous vote. The reforms of the Federal Employees Health Care Freedom-of-Choice Act are long overdue within the Federal health insurance program. I urge my colleagues support for vital reform.

PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCY FUND

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, when an American community suffers the ravages of an earthquake, hurricane, or flood, a variety of Federal assistance programs are available to States and localities to help them protect public health and rebuild property. We do not expect State or local governments to shoulder this financial burden alone.

I believe the same logic should apply when a public health emergency, such as AIDS, Legionnaire's disease, or toxic shock syndrome arises. State and local governments cannot anticipate these sudden crises when formulating their budgets. Hospitals and health departments may be unable to mobilize adequate resources and personnel expeditiously during an emergency. Sufficient funding for facilities, personnel, and equipment may simply not be available.

A mechanism that permits the Federal Government to assist, as needed, is essential. In these situations, understanding and compassion are not enough.

Mr. Speaker, a bill I am reintroducing today would establish a $100 million revolving fund for treatment and prevention services in response to a public health emergency. The funds would be provided, on an emergency basis only, through grants and contracts to State and local governments in areas particularly hard hit by a health crisis. Those governing bodies would have the option of providing services directly, or contracting out to institutions such as hospitals, clinics, hospices, and community-based organizations.

This bill amends the Public Health Emergency Act, enacted during the 98th Congress, which provides emergency funds for research into the cause, treatment, and prevention of health crises. The fund that I am proposing would complement this act by providing resources for actual treatment and prevention activities.

The best example of the need for this fund is the most recent example. AIDS has hit certain cities across the country particularly hard. These cities include New York, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Newark, Houston, Washington, DC, Chicago, and Miami. In most cases, the local governments are doing the best they can to respond with treatment and prevention efforts, but they are drawing on already scarce resources. The public hospitals, for example, already suffering from inadequate resources, are overwhelmed.

As of December 19, nearly 81,000 cases of AIDS had been reported nationwide. The Public Health Service now estimates there will be a total of 365,000 cases of AIDS diagnosed by the end of 1992; in 1992 alone, they anticipate that 80,000 cases will be diagnosed. The project cost of medical care just in the year 1992 is between $5 billion and $13 billion.

This tremendous cost is compounded by the unfortunate reality that many persons with AIDS do not have health insurance. Those who are covered may carry a policy that does not reimburse for experimental treatment, or expires because of the size of the medical bills. Persons with AIDS must wait 2 years before they qualify for Medicare disability benefits. Many do not qualify for Medicaid.

This bill that I am introducing today will not cover the enormous costs associated with the AIDS epidemic. But at the time AIDS was first identified as an infectious disease spreading rapidly among vulnerable Americans, a public health emergency fund such as my bill would create would have provided the early assistance for prevention that may have helped to keep the disease from spreading as rapidly as it has. Without outside help, local efforts can be expected to focus on only the most immediate needs, and in the case of AIDS this was all too often at the expense of prevention strategies.

Mr. Speaker, an alarming and ever increasing number of Americans are suffering from a frightening disease that no one anticipated. Who knows when an outbreak of a new epidemic will occur. Let us be prepared to help cities and States fight it wherever and whenever it arises. It is imperative that the Congress communicate to State and local public health officials—and to the American people—that next time they need not face the struggle alone.

I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important legislation. The text of the bill follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that section 319 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247d) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(c)(1) The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Centers for Disease Control, may make grants to and enter into contracts with States and political subdivisions of States for programs conducted or supported by the States and political subdivisions for the prevention and treatment of public health emergencies determined under subsection (a) to exist. Funds provided under grants and contracts under this paragraph may be used by States and political subdivisions to conduct such programs and to provide grants and contracts for public and nonprofit private entities to conduct such programs. Applications for grants and contracts from the Secretary shall be subject to such conditions as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

"(2) There is established in the Treasury a fund designated the 'Public Health Emergency Prevention and Treatment Fund' to be available to the Secretary without fiscal year limitation to carry out paragraph (1). There is authorized to be appropriated to the fund $100,000,000 for fiscal year 1989. For fiscal year 1989 and each fiscal year thereafter there is authorized to be appropriated to the fund such sums as may be necessary to have $100,000,000 in the fund at the beginning of such fiscal year.

"(3) the Secretary shall report to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate not later than ninety days after the end of a fiscal year—

"(A) on the expenditures made from the Public Health Emergency Prevention and Treatment Fund in such fiscal year; and

"(B) describing each public health emergency for which the expenditures were made and the activities undertaken with respect to each emergency which were conducted or supported by expenditures from the Fund.".

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO CODIFY THE FAIRNESS DOCTRINE

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing legislation which would codify the fairness doctrine. In the last Congress, by an overwhelming margin of 200 votes, the House passed a nearly identical piece of legislation. Unfortunately, the President vetoed the bill on June 23, 1987.

Taking advantage of the Presidential veto, the Federal Communications Commission administratively abolished the doctrine on August 4 of the same year. The FCC overextended its mandate in this instance by presuming to create policy in defiance of clearly expressed congressional intent. This inexcusable disregard for congressional intent makes it incumbent upon the Congress to ensure that broadcasters provide balanced coverage of controversial issues.

If my colleagues would take a moment to read this legislation, they would discover that the doctrine is embodied in one very simple sentence; "A broadcast licensee shall afford reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views."

Mr. Speaker, this is not an onerous burden upon broadcasters. Indeed they readily admit that airing conflicting opinions is only good journalism. Furthermore, over 40 years of successful experience with the doctrine is more than sufficient to demonstrate that the Government is capable of enforcing fairness in broadcasting without interfering in the substance of issues.

The legislation I offer today unambiguously makes the doctrine a part of the Communications Act of 1934. This amendment is necessary only to restore the status quo which existed before an out-of-control regulatory agency arrogated to itself the right to make broadcasting policy.

Opponents of the fairness doctrine argue that scarcity of broadcast frequencies no longer exists, but that argument simply does not hold water. The fact is that broadcast frequencies remain a valuable and scarce national resource. The Federal Government, in order to prevent cacophony on the airwaves, grants to broadcasters exclusive rights to a broadcast frequencies. In return for the monopoly rights to this precious resource, the Government asks only for "fairness."

The fairness doctrine has already been upheld as constitutional by the Supreme Court in its 1969 Red Lion decision. Recognizing the public's right to be informed, the Supreme Court held that as long as there were substantially more people who wanted to broadcast than there are frequencies to allocate, the fairness doctrine advanced first amendment values.

The fundamental scarcity of broadcast frequencies which led to that conclusion has not been remedied. The number of comparative renewal applications pending at the FCC are greater than ever. Likewise, the prices of broadcast properties—which greatly exceed the value of the assets involved—have soared astronomically. These two examples do not suggest that broadcast media have become more accessible. On the contrary, they vividly illustrate the continuing scarcity of broadcast spectrum.

In the last Congress, identical legislation attracted a diverse collection of groups supporting codification of the doctrine. Representatives of all parts of the political spectrum favor codification of the doctrine. Rarely, if ever, has such a broad coalition of interests allied for a cause: General Motors and the United Auto Workers; Mobil Oil and the AFL–CIO; Phyllis Schlafly and Ralph Nader; and a lengthy list of others supported this legislation in the last Congress.

My colleagues may ask themselves why this group came together: The simple answer is that everybody wants to be treated fairly. When Government-sponsored monopolies are no longer required to be fair, everybody loses.

Mr. Speaker, in a democracy the public must be informed in order to make decisions. As legislators we have a duty to guarantee that conflicting points of view be heard thereby enhancing the public's right to be informed.

I encourage my colleagues to support codification of the fairness doctrine.

CONGRESSMAN STEVE GUNDERSON RECEIVES DISTINGUISHED SERVICE AWARD

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that one of our Members has been uniquely cited for his outstanding dedication and continuing efforts on behalf of his constituents as well as all of the citizens of Wisconsin. He is noted as a leader in his field as well I can attest. His constituents must be proud of him as we here in the House of Representatives join in congratulating him on the receiving of Wisconsin's Farm Bureau Federation's highest citation, the distinguished service award.

I would like to insert here the statement of the Wisconsin Farm Bureau Federation honoring Congressman STEVE GUNDERSON.

CONGRESSMAN STEVE GUNDERSON RECEIVES DISTINGUISHED SERVICE AWARD

STEVE GUNDERSON, you have gained recognition and respect here in Wisconsin and in Washington as a leader in federal education and agriculture policy. From your roots in the rural community of Osseo, you have become a staunch advocate for Wisconsin farmers in the Nation's Capitol.

Your contributions as a public servant began at the age of 23 when you were elected to the Wisconsin Assembly where you served two terms. Later, you worked on Lee Dreyfus' successful campaign for Governor.

Once elected to the House of Representatives in 1980 as the representative from Wisconsin's 3rd Congressional District, you won a seat on the House Agriculture Committee. Your efforts to reduce dairy surpluses and keep the small farmer in business, culminated in the passage of the dairy diversion program. The program has successfully reduced taxpayer costs and surplus production.

But agriculture has not been the only area in which you have been a key player. As a member of the House Education and Labor Committee, you were instrumental in rewriting the Vocational Education Act to assist in training and retraining workers for America's high tech work force. Non-traditional adult students have found in you an advocate working to expand their educational opportunities.

Steve Gunderson, the Wisconsin Farm Bureau Federation is proud to present to you its highest citation, the award for Distinguished Service to Wisconsin Agriculture.

MARK, AN EXTRAORDINARY BOOK

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I do not think in my 8 years in the House I have ever used the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to call attention to a particular book. I do so today.

The book is entitled "Mark." It is an extraordinary story of a courageous and inspiring young man who died of AIDS, written by an equally courageous and inspiring individual, his father.

When Mark Hoyle was diagnosed with AIDS in 1985, the sad fact was that in much of the country, children with AIDS were being victimized by the adults who ran school systems in a variety of ways. The town of Swansea, MA, broke that mold. Led by a thoughtful, compassionate and wise superintendent, John McCarthy, the citizens of Swansea simply did the right thing: They treated Mark with respect, compassion, and love, and among the things they did was to allow him to continue as a student. I should note that Mark did stay in the Swansea school system for as long as he was physically able, and no one several years after that has been able to point to any health problems whatsoever for any other student.

This book, "Mark," discusses that aspect of Mark's illness, but it does much more. It is an extraordinary story of the way in which people can respond to adversity with the best of human qualities. Jay Hoyle, Mark's father, is obviously a man to be admired for a wide variety of reasons. One of them is his willingness to set down this story in book form—obviously it could not have been easy for him to reveal some of the most intimate feelings he and his family had about the illness which took their son from them. But Jay Hoyle understands that fear, ignorance, and bigotry are among the obstacles which confront people with AIDS, and he has written a book which, if read and understood widely, will do an enormous amount to counteract those.

Mr. Speaker, because this is such a remarkable book, I am going to do something I have never done before and will probably never do again in my career in the House—I ask that the explanatory material on the book jacket be printed here, and I want to express my gratitude to Jay Hoyle, to his wife Dale, and their son Scott, to their fellow and sister residents of Swansea who behaved so responsibly toward Mark, and to Langford Books of South Bend, IN, for agreeing to publish this extremely instructive work.

MARK

Mark Hoyle was a vibrant, all-American youngster . . . popular with his peers . . . honor roll student . . . Little League baseball star . . . enjoying life as a typical teenager . . . until June of 1985, when he was diagnosed as having AIDS, the result of treatments for his severe hemophilia. Mark is a father's moving account of his son's sixteen-month struggle against AIDS, the disease that claimed his life but never his spirit.

Here also is the story of the Hoyles' hometown, the small community of Swansea, Massachusetts. While young AIDS victims in other areas were being greeted by fear, ugliness, and rancor, something different and something very special happened in Swansea. This close-knit community of 15,000 did not turn its back on its youthful victim, choosing instead to reject the venom and violence that had become so public elsewhere. With heartwarming acceptance and generosity, Swansea unconditionally embraced young Mark Hoyle.

Mark is one of the first books to explore the personal and social dimensions which the victims, their families, and communities must face. Written in diary-like form, the book allows the reader to get to know Mark and his family and to experience their daily battle to keep hoping in the face of physical and emotional pain. It contains the proceedings of the explosive school meeting where the pros and cons of Mark's attendance at Case Junior High were aired with passion. The candid and informed presentation by medical personnel and the unbending fairness of school administrators led a huge majority of the parents to join their children in welcoming Mark to school—the first child with AIDS knowingly allowed to attend public school.

Soon the town of Swansea, led by a group called "Friends of Mark," rallied in support of Mark. Raffles, dances, and other fundraisers were held to help with the burden of costly medical bills and, perhaps most importantly, to lift and sustain the spirits of the Hoyle family. Far from being shunned, Mark became Swansea's cause and, in its dramatic and unwavering support of one of its own, the community of Swansea—from the children to the elders—set a lasting example of human goodness and love.

The story of Mark, of the Hoyle family, and of Swansea is one of tragedy being met with courage, faith, and compassion. It is truly a story for our time.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

James F. (Jay) Hoyle was born in Fall River, Massachusetts, on June 18, 1947. He graduated from St. Anselm College in Manchester, New Hampshire, and for the past nineteen years he has taught in Attleboro, Massachusetts, at St. John the Evangelist School, where his principal subject is history. In addition to being a devoted family man and teacher, Jay finds time to be an ardent fan of the Boston Red Sox, the Celtics, and the Patriots. Jay, his wife Dale, and son Scott are proud residents of the very special community of Swansea, Massachusetts.

BALANCED BUDGET ACT OF 1989

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, the "Balanced Budget Amendment Act of 1989" addresses the need for a balanced budget and a reduction of this Nation's budget deficit.

This measure would require the President to submit to Congress each year a budget proposal which is in balance and contains no deficit. It would also require the House and Senate Budget Committees to report budgets that are in balance.

If either the President or the Budget Committees believe that a balanced budget is unachievable or undesirable in a given year, they could also propose—in addition to the balanced budget—a spending plan that is not in balance. In such a case, they would have to provide a detailed, comprehensive plan to bring the budget into balance in later years. Any departure from a balanced budget would have to be fully justified.

Changes in the budget process to date—such as the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings automatic cutting mechanism—have focused on the final result. None has focused on the starting point. The effort to balance the budget would be more successful if the budget process had to start with a balanced budget.

The United States has gone from being the world's largest net international creditor in 1982 to being the world's largest net international debtor since 1986. The continued high deficit spending presents a clear and present danger to America's economic independence and to the prosperity of future generations of Americans. I invite my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important legislation.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the national debt reached $2.1 trillion at the end of fiscal year 1984, up from $1.0 trillion at the end of fiscal year 1981;

(2) the United States has gone from being the world's largest net international creditor in 1982 to being the world's largest net international debtor in 1986;

(3) failure to immediately reduce annual budget deficits and the growth in the national debt holds interest rates high and increases and prolongs the United States' dependence on foreign capital to finance the national debt;

(4) the inflow of foreign capital leads to an overvalued dollar which effectively subsidizes foreign imports and taxes our exports, harming American business and sacrificing American jobs; and

(5) persistent, high deficit spending presents a clear and present danger to the America's economic independence and to the prosperity of future generations of Americans.

SEC. 2. BALANCED BUDGET PROPOSAL.

(a) TRANSMISSION OF BALANCED BUDGET PROPOSAL BY PRESIDENT.—The President shall transmit to the Congress pursuant to section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, for fiscal year 1990 and for each fiscal year thereafter, a budget proposal which would, if implemented, result in a balanced budget.

(b) TRANSMISSION OF ALTERNATE BUDGET PROPOSALS BY THE PRESIDENT.—

(1) If the President determines that a balanced budget is inappropriate for any fiscal year, he may also transmit, in addition to the balanced budget proposal, alternate budget proposals which, if implemented, would result in a deficit or surplus.

(2) Each alternate budget proposal for a fiscal year transmitted under paragraph (1) shall include an explicit, understandable explanation of the specific differences between such proposals and the balanced budget proposal. The explanation shall include a statement as to why the President determined that a balanced budget would be inappropriate for the fiscal year or years involved and shall show the consequences of each proposal as they would affect the several budget functions and the economy, setting forth the effects of the proposal on spending levels, revenues, employment, inflation, interest rates, and national security.

(3) Alternate budget proposals for a fiscal year transmitted under paragraph (1) shall include a comprehensive plan to balance the Federal budget. Such plan shall include—

(A) a clear explanation of its impact on the following major categories of the budget: defense spending, nondefense discretionary spending, means-tested and nonmeans-tested entitlement spending, interest costs, and revenues;

(B) an analysis of its impact on the major programs within each category;

(C) an analysis of its impact on each major source of revenues; and

(D) a proposed timetable for its implementation.

SEC. 3. REPORTING OF BUDGET BY BUDGET COMMITTEES.

(a) REPORTING OF BALANCED BUDGET.—The Committee on the Budget of each House of Congress shall report for fiscal year and for each fiscal year thereafter a budget that is in balance, showing the consequences of such budget as they would affect the several budget functions and the economy, and setting forth the effects of such budget on spending levels, revenues, employment, inflation, interest rates, and national security.

(b) REPORTING OF ALTERNATE BUDGETS.—

(1) If the Committee on the Budget of either House determines that a balanced budget is inappropriate for any fiscal year, such committee may also report, in addition to the balanced budget which it reports, alternate budget proposals which, if implemented, would result in a deficit or surplus.

(2) Each alternate budget proposal for a fiscal year transmitted under paragraph (1) shall include an explicit, understandable explanation of the specific differences between such proposals and the balanced budget proposal. The explanation shall include a statement as to why the committee determined that a balanced budget would be inappropriate for the fiscal year or years involved and show the consequences of each such proposal as they would affect the several budget functions and the economy, setting forth the effects of the proposal on spending levels, revenues, employment, inflation, interest rates, and national security.

(3) Alternate budget proposals for a fiscal year transmitted under paragraph (1) shall include a comprehensive plan to balance the Federal budget. Such plan shall include—

(A) a clear explanation of its impact on the following major categories of the budget: defense spending, nondefense discretionary spending, means-tested and nonmeans-tested entitlement spending, interest costs, and revenues;

(B) an analysis of its impact on the major programs within each category;

(C) an analysis of its impact on each major source of revenues; and

(D) a proposed timetable for its implementation.

THE OVERSEAS TEACHERS ACT

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, as you know, many of us have sought to improve the working conditions for Department of Defense dependents' school teachers. We have also attempted to maintain the integrity of the teacher work force and protect the compensation program from unwanted budgetary reductions.

The legislation I am introducing today is a modest proposal to help ensure that we attract and retain superior teachers in the overseas school system. We must do our utmost to guarantee the finest possible education for the children of the members of our armed services and civilian employees serving abroad.

The Federal public schools are responsible for the education of 140,000 American children living abroad—they are the sons and daughters of our service men and women who contribute so much to the defense of our country, and who deserve nothing less than the best education for their children. It is important that our military families be able to stay together, with their children assured of a quality public education regardless of where they are stationed around the world.

Most of us would view the prospect of living in Japan, Germany, or Holland—to name but a few of the locations of the over 270 schools—with the excitement of children visiting Disneyland. These places have a mystical allure in the minds of most Americans.

Mr. Speaker, in some countries, however, the realities of life are far less pleasant for our overseas personnel due to the high cost of living and the modest salaries paid them. Many of the employees also encounter substandard housing, language difficulties, cultural adjustments, poor medical facilities, and less sophisticated communications systems. We sometimes forget that Americans have the world's highest standard of living.

Several years ago, I chaired a hearing of the Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits on legislation I had introduced concerning the overseas school system. This hearing revealed several problem areas, some which may be handled administratively by the Department of Defense, and some which requires congressional legislation.

The most common complaint of career teachers in the overseas system is the denial of transfers. Most teachers would be willing to accept difficult living conditions for a year or two, if they could expect to be transferred to a less demanding assignment. The inadequate housing, nonportable water, and crowded classrooms are more tolerable if the prospect of better surroundings and working conditions are foreseeable.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it is fitting that the Federal Government recognize the true worth of the teaching professional by establishing within that profession the means to attain reasonable financial rewards consistent with the contribution teachers make to our society.

We ask so much of our armed service members and their families: They suffer frequent dislocations and family separations. They are the true servants of the public—volunteers from every part of America dedicated to the freedom of our great republic. I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting this legislation to help ensure that their children continue to have the best public education possible.

TRIBUTE TO BRIG. GEN. MICHAEL A. BOYD

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I pay tribute today to a distinguished constituent of the 17th Congressional District of New York, Michael A. Boyd, who will soon be leaving his position as brigadier general of the 353d Civil Affairs Command of the U.S. Army Reserve.

Brigadier General Boyd is a veteran whose 30 years of service to the U.S. military deserves commendation. Brigadier General Boyd began his military career in 1962, when he entered active duty at Fort Benning, GA, where he was selected as the honor graduate of the infantry officer orientation course. Brigadier General Boyd continued on to achieve the highest academic standing among the members of the intelligence research officer course at the U.S. Army Intelligence School.

After completing active duty, Brigadier General Boyd received an LL.B. from Harvard Law School in 1967. During his time at Harvard, Brigadier General Boyd continued to serve his country by joining the 357th Area Headquarters B. He received the highly regarded Gen. John J. Pershing Award for academic excellence when he completed the Command and General Staff College.

In November 1978, Brigadier General Boyd became the Commander of the 453d Military Intelligence Detachment/Strategic, a position he held through June 1982. During his tenure, this unit was cited for excellence in the preparation and development of studies of many aspects of the Soviet Armed Forces. Brigadier General Boyd assumed command of the 353d Civil Affairs in April 1985 after holding several other positions in the unit.

In civilian life, Brigadier General Boyd is a senior vice president and general counsel with the investment banking firm of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette. In this capacity, he is responsible for all compliance and legal matters for the firm, which has over 3,600 employees and assets in excess of $5.4 billion. I believe his time-consuming and demanding civilian job makes Brigadier General Boyd's dedicated service to his country all the most impressive.

A farewell dinner is being held in Brigadier General Boyd's honor on January 12, 1989. I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in thanking Brigadier General Boyd for his outstanding military service and to wish him well in future endeavors.

HONORED ON RETIREMENT

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today and pay tribute to a very special woman, Rose Marie Grasham Connelly.

On December 31, 1988, Rose was officially retired after working with General Telephone of California for 29½ years. Rose's friends and associates will gather this Friday to honor her and thank her for the many years she has given to General Telephone.

Rose is the youngest of 11 children, 8 of which are still living. Originally from Rockwood, TN, Rose's family moved to Rome, GA, where she studied and graduated from Carroll Lynn Business College with a degree in accounting. This education offered her a position with the United States Steel Corp. in Youngstown, OH, where she later met her husband, Jim Connelly, to whom she has been married for 40 years.

Jim and Rose have two daughters, Theresa Merkel and Martina Hooven. Theresa is a research nurse at Loma Linda University and she and her husband, John, have one daughter, Shannon Marie. Martina is an executive manager for Transamerican Financial Corp. and she and her husband, Jack, have two daughters, Amanda Rose and Elizabeth Marie.

Although retirement will be a different kind of experience for Rose, she doesn't plan on letting it slow her down! She has always been involved with her husband, Jim, in providing local schools and churches with added assistance and she plans to continue to do so in the future. She also plans to find the time to travel with her husband and cater to her three grandchildren.

Please join me in honoring Rose Marie Grasham Connelly on behalf of her hard work and commitment to General Telephone of California. All the best to you, Rose, at your special celebration Friday, January 6, 1989, and throughout your much deserved retirement.

FIRE SAFE CIGARETTE ACT

HON. JOE MOAKLEY

OF MASSACHUSETTES

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce the Fire Safe Cigarette Act of 1989, legislation which would authorize the Consumer Product Safety Commission to implement a standard for a firesafe cigarette which could save thousands of lives, prevent even more serious injuries, and save millions of dollars in property damage each year.

According to a report released by the Technical Study Group on cigarette and little cigar safety, a firesafe cigarette is technically feasible and can be produced at a minimal cost. The key characteristics that lead to producing a cigarette less likely to cause fires include the presence of a filter tip, less porous paper, more expanded tobacco, no citrate additive, and in some cases a smaller diameter. The development and manufacturing of a firesafe cigarette should not be prolonged any longer. It can be done!

With each and every year that passes, and we continue to debate the issues surrounding fires caused by a carelessly discarded cigarette, thousands of individuals are burned, maimed, and even killed. However, as we deliberate, lives continue to be lost and needless tragedy continues to occur. The statistics are indeed alarming; in 1984 alone, 67,000 cigarette-initiated fires resulted in 1,570 deaths, 7,000 serious injuries, and $390 million in property damage.

It is clear to me that our Nation suffers an incalculable loss from cigarette-initiated fires in terms of human life, natural resources, and property. The Fire Safe Cigarette Act is a reasonable and realistic answer to this pressing problem. I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

IN HONOR OF DOUGLAS G. WARNOCK ON HIS RETIREMENT FROM THE NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

HON. DOUGLAS H. BOSCO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BOSCO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Douglas G. Warnock, who recently retired after 6 years of service as the superintendent of Redwood National Park in northern California.

Doug Warnock has served with the National Park Service for over 30 years, and he is one of the most respected and admired public servants on the north coast. I am fortunate to have had the opportunity to work with Doug on many occasions over the years, and I am grateful for the many lessons he taught me regarding the proper stewardship of our Nation's diverse natural resources.

Doug's decades of caring for our Nation's natural resources and his wealth of experience in bringing the wonders of the environment to countless national park visitors made him a unique and precious resource on the north coast. His presence and expertise will be sorely missed by those of us who treasure Redwood National Park.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a profile of Doug Warnock which appeared in the Eureka Times-Standard on December 28, 1988, and I urge my colleagues to join me in saluting Doug for his many years of service to the Nation and the environment.

SERVICE TO THE PARKS

RETIRING PARK DIRECTOR REFLECTS ON LONG CAREER

(By Robert Belous)

ORICK.—Douglas G. Warnock, superintendent of Redwood National Park for the past six years, retired on Dec. 24. The Christmas-Eve departure brought to a close a career spanning four decades with the National Park Service.

Warnock's park service career began with the white pine blister rust control program at Yosemite National Park, while a sophomore at Dos Palos High School in Dos Palos, Calif.

"The time was easy to remember," Warnock said, "Our work was interrupted on Aug. 15, 1945, with the news of Japan's surrender and the end of World War II."

Following graduation from California State University at Fresno with a degree in biology, and two years' military service with the U.S. Army Field Artillery, Warnock landed his first full-time job with the park service in 1954 as a ranger/naturalist at Carlsbad Caverns National Park in New Mexico.

After two additional assignments in New Mexico (Aztec Ruins and Chaco Canyon National Monuments), Warnock was selected as one of only five employees from the National Park Service for a year-long management training program in Washington D.C. He then returned to Yosemite as district ranger, where he remained for nine years. In 1968, he was selected as chief ranger at Shenandoah National Park in Virginia.

During a subsequent assignment as assistant superintendent at Philadelphia's Independence Hall, Warnock received the once-in-a-lifetime opportunity of helping to plan America's 1975 Bicentennial Celebration.

These duties included arrangements for a visit by Queen Elizabeth II. He also assisted in formal acceptance by the U.S. of a gift from the British Government—a Bicentennial Bell cast by the Whitechapel Foundry of England, which produced the original Liberty Bell in 1752. One of the treasured memories, Warnock recalls, was stepping aboard the HMS Britannia for a private audience with the Queen and Prince Philip.

Following a two-year return assignment to New Mexico as associate regional director for park operations, Warnock was chosen in 1979 as deputy regional director for the newly established Alaska Regional Office in Anchorage.

Overseeing start-up operations for 15 park units along our nation's "Last Frontier," Warnock gained four years of experience in cross-cultural relations with Aleut, Eskimo and Athapascan peoples of bush Alaska.

Alaska's parklands comprise over 51 million acres, or about 1½ times the combined area of all national parks in the contiguous "lower 48 states."

The opportunity to return to his home state came in March 1983, when the Redwood superintendency became available.

"Like many senior managers in the service, I'd always looked forward to taking over one of the large western parks," Warnock said. "But I never anticipated the challenge of repairing 36,000 acres of heavily roaded clearcuts, while at the same time accommodating the fast-growing visitor trend to the redwoods."

During Warnock's six-year tenure, the park's visitation climbed from 549,436 in 1982 to an all-time high of 715,000 during 1988. While still a comparatively young park (established 1968, expanded 1978), Redwood has already surpassed visitation in such longstanding parks as Lassen and Oregon's Crater Lake, both more than 75 years old.

This sharp rise in visitation, Warnock points out, is largely attributable to a very active and positive media profile, and the spreading word that redwood is emerging from its healing phase as one of our great western parklands.

Redwood National Park has been the subject of major feature articles in Sunset magazine, Motorland, Audubon and numerous syndicated news journals, such as the Los Angeles Times and Washington Post.

"When Newsweek magazine mentions Redwood as a place to be sure and visit, it's bound to make a difference," he said.

Warnock was elected for a three-year term to the Board of Directors of the Redwood Empire Association during their October meeting in Eureka. The San Francisco-based organization is dedicated to tourism promotion in California's northern counties.

Rehabilitation of logged lands and aquatic habitats within the park has made substantial progress under Warnock's administration. More than 26,000 trees were planted during 1988, for example, with similar numbers for the prior five years. And 27 miles of equestrian trails have emerged from what was, in part, old logging roads along Redwood Creek.

Also, the completion during 1988 of a controlled-flow diversion culvert at the mouth of Redwood Creek is serving to restore vital salmon and steelhead habitats lost due to construction in 1965 of the Orick levees.

Improved stream conditions throughout the watershed was a major contributor to the 1987-88 season, which brought the best returns of adult salmon and steelhead in more than a decade. The culvert's construction cost of $635,000 was derived from mitigation funds available to the park from the Highway 101 bypass project, a $115 million venture also initialed during Warnock's tenure.

Warnock also presided over construction of the $1.5 million Redwood Information Center near Orick, the park's southern gateway community. Summer visitor counts now exceed 1,000 visitors per day at the popular seaside structure, which was highlighted in the August 1988 issue of Sunset magazine.

In addition, under Warnock's direction the Hiouchi Information Center was reconstructed, the Howland Hill Outdoor School was modernized, several new trailside camping areas were constructed, and the park's 30-mile Coastal Trail system was completed.

Perhaps the most unexpected of Warnock's accomplishments was crafting a four-way cooperative agreement between the park and the California Coastal Conservancy, Humboldt Area Foundation, American Youth Hostels, Inc., and the Del Norte County camp of the California Conservation Corps. Emerging from their arrangement was the complete refurbishment of the former pioneer homestead of the Louis P. DeMartin family at Wilson Creek, 12 miles south of Crescent City.

Badly dilapidated from age and disuse, the turn-of-the-century structure opened to the public in July 1987 as the Redwood AYH Hostel and has since surpassed all projections for visitor use and enjoyment.

"Just watching that old homestead come back to life has been one of the most rewarding opportunities of my time at the park," Warnock recalls.

Warnock, who counts fishing, boating and photography among his hobbies, is married to the former Thelma Alice Ward, a fellow graduate of Fresno State in 1952. They were married the year of their graduation and now have three daughters and two sons.

Thelma Warnock has been an active member and leader for more than 20 years in the National Park Women's Association and is currently the organization's national cochairman. She is also district secretary for the General Federation of Women's Clubs, an active member of the Crescent City chapter and Crescent City United Methodist Church.

The Warnocks plan to maintain their home along the Smith River near Hiouchi, a suburb of Crescent City.

When asked about likely activities for his retirement agenda, Warnock displays a wry smile: "I'll try to keep a quiet eye on my favorite park from time to time and maybe offer the new superintendent a counseling cup of coffee, along with a word or two of advice, just to sweeten the brew," Warnock says.

"After all, I'd like to see more of those salmon and steelhead coming back each year, now that I've got some spare time."

THE PUBLIC UTILITY HOLDING COMPANY MODERNIZATION ACT OF 1989

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which would simplify the current regulation of public utility companies and permit limited diversification by these companies. My bill would accomplish this by amending the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 to allow registered public utility holding companies the opportunities to invest up to 15 percent of their assets in diversified nonutility activities and businesses, without going through the cumbersome and time-consuming Securities and Exchange Commission [SEC] approval process. Any proposed utility acquisition would remain subject to SEC approval.

Although there are several hundred public utility companies in this country, today only 12 active holding companies are registered public utility holding companies under the terms of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935. These companies are subject to rigorous prior SEC approval of their securities transactions and many other business activities.

Registered public utility holding companies also are prohibited from engaging in businesses unless such businesses are "reasonably incidental, or economically necessary or appropriate to the operations of such integrated public utility system. * * *"

In implementing this provision, the SEC has adopted a functional relationship test to use as a touchstone for evaluating investments by registered holding companies. Moreover, even if the SEC determines that an investment is functionally related to the utilities business, this determination often takes many months, or even years.

In our fast-changing world, business opportunities seldom wait that long. The bureaucratic approval process the SEC must go through thus serves to discourage otherwise sound investments which might be advantageous not only to the businesses involved, but also to the economy in general, and investors and consumers as well.

The Holding Company Act was adopted to address substantial financial abuses which occurred in holding companies during the early part of this century. When Congress enacted the Holding Company Act, the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 were too new to determine their effectiveness.

Financial disclosure and investor protection were concepts then in their infancy. Federal and State regulation of public utilities was largely ineffective. As a consequence, public utility holding companies escaped rigorous Federal and State oversight.

Today, this is no longer the case. Public utilities are perhaps the most pervasively regulated businesses in the country. Financial disclosure requirements administered by the SEC, along with Federal and State economic regulation of electric and gas utilities, are extremely effective and diminish the opportunity for abuse. The antiquated Holding Company Act, however, still limits the operation of holding companies to businesses that are functionally related to the operation of such integrated public utility holding companies.

Thus, registered holding companies are precluded from diversifying assets out of their core utility businesses even if diversification would benefit shareholders and ratepayers by spreading risk or increasing nonutility business opportunities for profit.

First, my bill would allow registered holding companies to undertake limited diversification by permitting investment of up to 15 percent of their total consolidated assets in a nonutility business that does not meet the historic functional relationship test.

Second, this proposal would also allow nonutility subsidiaries, which are not themselves registered holding companies, to issue SEC-approved securities without Commission approval under the additional terms of the Holding Company Act.

Third, this measure would allow a registered utility holding company to acquire securities or interests in other nonutility businesses up to the 15-percent limit without Commission approval.

The effect of these modest changes would be to allow registered holding companies an opportunity to make small, nonutility investments without prior SEC approval under the Holding Company Act. All other securities laws, as well as Federal and State regulations, would continue to be applicable as would other major provisions of the Holding Company Act.

There is no question that the technical resources and management skill which exist in many utility operations can be applied to other businesses to diversify risk and to benefit both ratepayers and stockholders. Unfortunately, the existing Public Utility Holding Company Act effectively stifles innovative management's ability to use all tools at its disposal.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to bring the outdated Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 into the reality of 1989. My bill takes a modest step toward that end. I invite my colleagues to join me in support of this measure by adding their names as cosponsors.

H.R. —

A bill to amend the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 to permit public utility holding companies to invest in or to acquire an interest in any business other than the business of a public utility provided such investments or interests constitute 15 percent or less of the consolidated assets of the holding company, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited at the "Public Utility Holding Company Modernization Act of 1989".

The Commission by rules and regulations or order, subject to such terms and conditions as it deems appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, shall exempt from the provisions of subsection (a) the issue or sale of any security by any subsidiary company of a registered holding company, if the issue and sale of such security are solely for the purpose of financing the business of such subsidiary company and have been expressly authorized by the State commission of the State in which such subsidiary company is organized and doing business.".

SEC. 4. ACQUISITION OR RETENTION OF BUSINESS INTERESTS.

Section 11(b)(1) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 (15 U.S.C. 79k(b)(1)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The Commission shall permit a reasonably incidental, or as economically necessary or appropriate to the operations of one or more integrated public utility systems, the acquisition or retention in a holding company system of interests in one or more other businesses (other than the business of a public utility company as such) the book value of which in the aggregate constitute up to and including 15 per centum (or such greater percentage as the Commission authorizes) of the total consolidated assets of the holding company system and may permit the acquisition or retention of such additional interests in any business or businesses (other than the business of a public utility company as such) which the Commission shall find consistent with the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.".

A MEMORIAL TO SLAIN JOURNALISTS

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a resolution which will authorize the establishment of a memorial to honor members of the American press and other news media who have been killed as a result of hostilities while covering a war or other armed conflict.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most significant charters that has been solidified by the Bill of Rights is the importance of a free and vigorous press. In a letter written to George Washington in 1792, Thomas Jefferson once said, "The press is the best instrument for enlightening the mind of man and improving him as a rational, moral and social being."

Since Jefferson's time, the power of the press has certainly intensified. It has helped to make us understand and recognize the unrighteousness of war; it has fought and overthrown corruption; it has served to end the exploitation of individuals and nations; it has served to spread culture. And, it is the news correspondent's job to bring us the truth, fairness, interest and importance in every story ensuring that the public remains informed on fast-breaking events.

The news media is the flagbearer of democracy, a symbol of this country's democratic ideology. A war correspondent is a watchdog on government when the government bears the most watching—during times of military conflict.

Since the time of the Revolutionary War, the American news media has kept this Nation informed. While under attack, amidst the battlefield, the war correspondent has brought back to the American people an accurate picture of what has transpired. They are the forgotten soldiers whose thankless job it is to report news both good and bad; news of bloodshed and death tolls, of victories and defeats, of heroics and atrocities. The journalist bears witness to all the contradictions of war.

The war correspondent is one of the bravest soldiers. Armed with only pen, camera and recorder, these reporters venture into the hottest battle, not for themselves, but for the American people. It is the public's need to know that sends the journalist into the center of live crossfire. The public must be made aware of those in the media who have lost their lives while in pursuit of obtaining the truth. By honoring those who have fallen, public attention will be drawn to the great impact these reporters have made, and future reporters will make, on any armed conflict.

The most famous of war correspondents, Ernie Pyle died a hero's death in the Pacific during World War II. He covered the war as realistically as he could—from the infantryman's point of view. He set the standard for war reporting for generations to come—until a bullet ended his life on the island of Iwo Jima on April 16, 1945.

It is difficult to forget some of the images we have seen over the years. I have so many vivid memories of the bombing of Pearl Harbor, the landing at Normandy Beach, the atomic bomb being dropped on Hiroshima, the American marine troops defending Khe Senh, reports of the Tet Offensive, Bay of Pigs, the list goes on and on. In more recent days, who can forget the public's apprehension when awaiting news of the attack on Grenada, the Falkland Islands, the massacres in Lebanon, Afghanistan and Central America? The public relies on the news of the correspondent who ultimately risks his life in order to bring us the continuing saga of war and conflict across the seas.

Mr. Speaker, many members of the news media have died, suffered terrible wounds, and behaved heroically while covering armed conflicts. I feel the importance of this memorial is long overdue.

INTRODUCTION OF H.R. 145

HON. NORMAN Y. MINETA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced H.R. 145, a bill to terminate certain amendments to the foreign repair station rules of the Federal Aviation Administration.

On December 22, 1988, new Federal aviation regulations took effect that permit repairs and maintenance on U.S. airline aircraft to be conducted overseas to a far greater extent than previously allowed. Prior to the regulatory change, U.S. airline aircraft could only be maintained at a foreign repair station if the aircraft were used in international service. Also, the previous regulations, as interpreted by the Federal Aviation Administration, limited overseas repairs to those necessary to move the aircraft in a safe airworthy manner. Routine and periodic scheduled maintenance had been regarded as outside the scope of what was permitted at a foreign repair station.

The December revisions permit U.S. aircraft operated in U.S. domestic service to be maintained at foreign repair stations and do not limit the scope of work that may be performed. Any and all types of maintenance are permitted. H.R. 145 would terminate the effectiveness of these regulatory changes and return the regulations to their previous formulation upon the date of enactment of the bill.

I recognize that some changes to the current rules on foreign repair stations are needed. Foreign manufacturers of aircraft and equipment should be able to conduct repairs and maintenances on their own manufactured equipment, even if that equipment is operated solely within the domestic United States. Likewise, foreign-based subsidiaries of U.S. aeronautical firms should have the ability to conduct maintenance on U.S. aircraft without the need for individual regulatory exemptions.

In both of these situations, the companies involved have long-standing, well-understood quality control systems upon which the FAA already relies heavily in the manufacture and maintenance of aircraft. Outside of these circumstances, I see no safety benefit to be gained from permitting U.S. aircraft to be routinely maintained abroad.

In fact, I see a number of potential safety problems if performance of routine maintenance on U.S. aircraft is permitted abroad outside of the circumstances just described. The FAA's air carrier safety inspection workforce continues to be understaffed. Though the FAA has made good strides in recent years in hiring additional inspectors, more are needed. Yet I understand that, in the formulation of the President's fiscal year 1990 budget proposal, there has been resistance by the administration to providing the FAA with all the inspectors the agency needs.

The new rules will certainly require more inspectors. Therefore, if there are not enough inspectors now, we will be even worse off under a regulatory scheme that adds a new dimension to the inspectors' current responsibilities.

Beyond the safety inspection issue, I believe that permitting maintenance to be conducted abroad in a wholesale fashion could significantly weaken airline managements' ability to directly control one of the most significant aspects of the airlines' operations—maintenance.

FAA safety inspections have revealed that airlines which fail to maintain adequate management controls are the ones that are likely to have deficiencies with respect to safety. While the responsibility for maintenance would continue to rest with the airlines under the new rule, I see no reason to encourage, through regulations, a diminishment of practical control and direct authority.

For these reasons, I believe the FAA needs to go back to the drawing board with respect to these regulations. H.R. 145 will force the FAA to do so.

The Subcommittee on Aviation will be monitoring developments under the new rules very closely, and I anticipate the subcommittee will be holding hearings.

Mr. Speaker, if our colleagues wish to cosponsor H.R. 145, they should have their staff contact the Subcommittee on Aviation staff at extension 5-9161.

ACID RAIN ABATEMENT ACT OF 1989

HON. JIM COOPER

OF TENNESSEE

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Acid Rain Abatement Act of 1989. The content of this bill is identical to H.R. 5211 in the 100th Congress, legislation I introduced on August 11, 1988. I believe that the approach of this bill is more valid than ever when viewed in light of the developments on the issue of acid rain late last fall.

For the past 2 months, Monday morning quarterbacks from Congress, industry and the public interest community have analyzed what went wrong last Congress that prevented us from adopting sensible acid rain control legislation. Everyone is pretty sure it was someone else's intransigence that killed the chances of a bill. The real tragedy in my mind, is that another year has passed without starting on the tough job or cleaning up our air and rain.

Even though we didn't pass a bill, we made significant progress. We're better informed on the facts and control strategies, and we understand more about legislative proposals that won't fly. In my estimation, we were closer to a bill than a lot of people thought. And I'm convinced that if we pick up where we left off, we can pull together to pass a bill that will get us on the road to real acid rain and ozone reductions right away.

On the acid rain issue, I'm offering my approach again as a starting point. Since it was introduced late in the game last year, I don't think it got the serious attention it deserved until it was too late. I'm sure it needs some tinkering, but I think it contains the concepts that will be pretty close to the perimeters of the acid rain package we eventually adopt.

It still won't be the favorite of industry, which wants no bill, and the environmental community, which wants a tougher bill. My bill is smack in the middle with something for everyone—yet with some things everyone dislikes. To me, that's the burden any compromise approach will bear—no one group will get all of what it wants. But it is in the right balance of that burden that we should reach our national policy on this issue.

As we near a new decade, it is time to get started toward some practically achievable sulfur dioxide reductions in the near term. My bill gets us moving toward a realistic short-term goal, and it gives industry time to adopt appropriate control mechanisms to meet the rigorous standards coming into effect down the road.

The 1990's is presenting us with more complex, more challenging environmental problems than we've ever seen before. It's time we put a fix on acid rain so that we can begin to delve more deeply into the problems of global warming and the greenhouse effect. On acid rain, it's time for all interested parties to put their differences aside and come to the middle ground.

H.R. 25, WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTION ACT

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, Representative FRANK HORTON and I are today introducing the Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989. It is precisely the same bill which both the House and Senate unanimously passed last October. It is precisely the same bill which we carefully negotiated out over a 13-month period with the Reagan administration. And, it is precisely the same bill which President Reagan pocket vetoed after Congress adjourned.

The bill creates a real whistleblower protection scheme for Federal employees by:

First, establishing an independent Office of Special Counsel with the clear mission of protecting Federal employees who are the victims of reprisal for disclosing wrongdoing;

Second, clearing away a thicket of court-made law which has made it nearly impossible for whistleblowers to obtain justice;

Third, permitting victims of reprisal to seek relief from the Merit Systems Protection Board directly if not satisfied with the help of the Office of Special Counsel; and Fourth, setting a sunset on the Office of Special Counsel to ensure that the agency carries out its mission properly.

The bill carefully balances the needs of management against the strong public interest in encouraging disclosures of fraud, waste, abuse, and illegality by protecting employees who come forward with such information.

President Reagan's veto message raised two sets of objections. First, he objected to the burden of proof set in the bill, despite the fact that the burden was jointly drafted by Senator CARL LEVIN and Office of Management and Budget Deputy Director Joe Wright. Since the burden of proof is the very heart of the bill, I do not see how we can weaken the burden of proof and still accomplish the purposes of this legislation.

Second, the President objected to the powers of the Office of Special Counsel, making arguments which had not been raised in the lengthy negotiations we had with the administration. The arguments raised were erroneous as a matter of law. Nevertheless, in this area, I think we could construct another formulation which would achieve the purposes of the legislation.

Our intent is to move this bill on the Suspension Calendar in the very near future. And, I fully expect that we will have a new, strong whistleblower protection law in place by Memorial Day.

ANTITRUST EXEMPTION FOR INDEPENDENT NATURAL GAS PROCEDURES

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a simple measure to benefit small, independent natural gas producers.

My overriding concern with the state of the energy industry in general is for its survival and the importance of our energy independence to our national security.

In order to enable small gas producers to more readily get their gas to market, I have introduced a bill which would provide antitrust exemptions to allow them to form cooperatives to pool and market larger quantities of gas. With so many of these small producers unable to find buyers for their production, passage of my measure would go a long way toward ensuring the viability of this important segment of our domestic energy industry.

With increased interest on the part of producers as well as consumers, I am confident that this issue will warrant the attention of my colleagues in the 101st Congress. I therefore invite my colleagues to join me in support of this modest proposal to enable our small domestic gas producers to get their production to market.

H.R.—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AVAILABILITY OF ANTITRUST DEFENSE.

There shall be available as a defense to any civil or criminal action brought under the Federal antitrust laws, as that term is defined in section 2(37) of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, or any similar State law, with respect to actions taken to develop cooperative associations of independent producers of natural gas or actions taken by such cooperative associations to carry out any voluntary agreement or plan of action to market natural gas in interstate commerce if—

(1) such action is necessary to market natural gas, and

(2) such action is not taken for the purpose of reducing competition.

SEC. 2. DEFINITION OF INDEPENDENT PRODUCER.

For the purpose of this Act, the term "independent producer" has the same meaning as that term has in section 4992(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

THE FEDERAL EMPLOYEES LONG TERM CARE ACT

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing the Federal Employees Long Term Care Act, which will establish demonstration projects that would offer Federal employees and retirees long-term care services under the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program [FEHBP]. As you well know, the cost of long-term care represents a catastrophic expense for most families, including Federal workers and retirees.

Under the FEHBP, which serves almost 10 million Federal workers, retirees, and dependents, most health insurance plans cover no more than 60 days of nursing home care. Furthermore, FEHBP plans provide practically no coverage for home nursing, adult day care, or other long-term care services. Consequently, FEHBP enrollees may face financial ruin if they need long term care.

We must find ways to fill this large and dangerous gap in health care insurance. The Federal Employees Long Term Care Act establishes demonstration projects that would offer long term health insurance programs in the Nation, the FEHBP can and should lead the Nation in developing such coverage.

Mr. Speaker, the bill I am re-introducing authorizes demonstration projects modeled on the "Social HMO" [SHMO] experiments which are now operating under Medicare. These SHMO's cover community-based services and nursing home care, which is coordinated so that community care is substituted for institutional care whenever possible. In addition, most care is provided for a fixed fee, paid in advance. As a result, the SHMO experiments are showing that Medicare can save money on expensive hospital and nursing home care, while affording patients better health care and a greater degree of independence.

The Federal Employees Long Term Care Act would authorize two FEHBP plans, which are currently participating in the Medicare SHMO experiment, to offer a similar trial benefit to Federal workers for 3 years. The bill authorizes not more than $3 million annually to pay for the experiment. At the conclusion, the Federal Government will have learned a great deal about how to provide and finance long-term care. We will be able to make informed decisions about whether and how to cover such care under the health insurance program.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and provide Federal employees with vitally needed long-term care benefits.

TRIBUTE TO MRS. CANDY L. LANNING

HON. JOEL HEFLEY

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Congress and the American people continually seem to ask and expect members of our Armed Forces to do more with less and work harder so they can accomplish their assigned mission. As a result, dedication, sacrifice, and devotion to duty are synonymous with being a member of the U.S. military family. But while those who wear the uniforms are the ones most visible and receive praise for a job well done, there is another group equally responsible for their success—their families.

Glowing words are rarely written praising the spouses who are tremendous supporters and also pick up the slack when their partner is away on duty. Yet the sacrifices by our families are a real factor in ensuring the strength of our country and the quality of our lives. In fact, the strength of the family has been an American value since the establishment of the Republic more than 200 years ago.

An excellent and commendable example of this family strength is Mrs. Candy Lanning. Candy is the wife of Major Steven Lanning, who has been assigned to the Pentagon over the past 2 years. During Major Lanning's duty here, Candy has shown tremendous support and loyalty.

Major Lanning has served as Air Force Legislative Liaison. Steve is not only a good friend but has aided immeasurably to my understanding of Air Force Space Programs. He has demonstrated professionalism and has built strong relationships with key Members and congressional staff. On every occasion asked, Steve quickly provided answers, for which I am grateful.

Given Steve's successful military career, Candy Lanning has made both sacrifices and contributions. Not only has she been completely supportive of her husband's job, which many times has exceeded 14 hours per day, she also raises two exceptional children and has been actively involved in the Annandale Virginia Public School System. Candy should have a lot of justifiable pride in the importance and selflessness of her contribution to the Air Force family, her community, and our country.

The Lannings will be leaving the Washington area soon for a reassignment to the Armed Forces Staff College in Norfolk, VA. I will miss Candy, Steve, and their family and I wish them well in their future assignment.

RETIREMENT EQUITY ACT

HON. DAVID DREIER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise out of concern for senior citizens who are being penalized by certain unfair requirements in the Social Security system. I am hopeful that we wil start the 101st session of Congress by seriously considering the Retirement Equity Act, which repeals three inequities in the Social Security system.

First, my bill eliminates the Social Security outside earnings limitation. This limitation requires Social Security to deduct $1 for every $2 earned above the exempt annual amount. This translates into a 50-percent tax on older workers who want, or need, to continue working. Although Social Security was not intended to be a full retirement program, one-fourth of all retired people depend on Social Security for 90 percent of their income. The outside earnings limitation almost forces these people into full retirement. Secretary Bowen and Commissioner Hardy have agreed that this limitation is in need of revision and I believe it is time for Congress to act.

Second, the Retirement Equity Act eliminates the tax on Social Security beneficiaries who earn above the arbitrary annual limit. We continue to encourage today's workers to plan ahead for retirement, reminding them that Social Security is only a partial retirement plan. Yet, we tax up to one-half the benefits of retirees if their full retirement earnings amount to more than the arbitrary cap: $25,000 for an individual, or $32,000 for a couple filing jointly. To add fuel to the fire, these income thresholds are not indexed for inflation. This is unfair to senior citizens and discouraging for today's workers who are planning for retirement.

Third, my bill eliminates the FICA and SECA tax on individuals over age 70. It makes no sense that these individuals must continue to pay into a retirement system for which they may never see a return. Not only are they forced to continue paying into the system, but should they make more than $25,000, they are subject to the Social Security tax.

I hope my colleagues will join me in my efforts to eliminate these real inequities in the Social Security system.

A BILL TO PROMOTE FISHERIES AND WILDLIFE CONSERVATION

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation designed to promote fisheries and wildlife conservation by providing the President with greater authority to take action against those nations that are violating domestic and international fisheries and wildlife laws.

One of the major issues that confronted the 100th Congress was that of reauthorizing and amending the Marine Mammal Protection Act. In the course of our deliberations on the bills that were presented to us, we received from the other body a suggestion that the President be given greater discretion under section 8 of the Fishermen's Protection Act. This section allows the President to embargo fish products from foreign nations that are diminishing the effectiveness of international conservation agreements and from foreign nations whose vessels use driftnets on the high seas but who have not entered into an acceptable monitoring and enforcement program.

The suggestion from the other body was simple and made sense: since the President has discretion to impose the embargo, why not expand his discretion to embargo any product, not just fish products. Any such embargo would still be a decision made by the President and would have to be consistent with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Unfortunately, this issue was discussed at the very end of the Congress and Members in the House believed that further analysis was necessary before taking this step. As a result, the language that was signed into law was limited to an expansion of the definition of "fish products", rather than a major—and in my opinion, necessary—expansion of the President's authority.

The bill that I am introducing today would provide the expansion of powers that the President needs to fully address the wide range of fisheries and wildlife conservation issues that we are facing. This language is supported by many in the U.S. commercial fishing industry and the environmental community. I believe that it is a necessary bill and I intend to push for rapid consideration in the House.

THE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO RESTORE TAX FAIRNESS FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing legislation which will correct an inequity in the New Tax Reform Act, passed in 1986, which unfairly penalizes Federal retirees. The Tax Reform Act retroactively repealed the 3-year basis recovery rule with regard to qualified pension plans requiring employee contributions.

Mr. Speaker, as I have stated previously, I believe the new tax law will lead to many constructive changes in our economy. This is landmark legislation, yet it is unfortunate that such a noteworthy bill was marred by a provision which is extremely unjust for Federal retirees.

Prior to the Reform Act, a retiree's annuity was not taxed until all of the employee contributions had been distributed and the contributions were fully recovered within 3 years of the starting date of the annuity. Under the new law, however, Federal income tax on retirement annuity now begins on the first day of retirement, with the tax-free employee's contribution spread out actuarially over the length of the annuity.

Mr. Speaker, the burden of this repeal falls squarely on the shoulders of the public retirees, one-fourth of whom are Federal annuitants. In addition, because the tax reform bill changed the tax treatment of Federal pensions retroactively, many annuitants and employees near retirement now face huge, unexpected tax bills which they will have difficulty paying.

My legislation provides that Federal annuities shall continue to be taxed as though the 3-year basis recovery rule had never been repealed. Under this bill, Federal retirees will continue to recoup all of their contributions to their annuity before their annuity is taxed. In addition, the bill instructs the Office of Personnel Management [OPM] to study and report to Congress on the likely effects of a retroactive tax change on Federal personnel management, morale, and individual retirement and financial planning. The OPM's study will also explore options for instituting such a change gradually, in order to minimize disruptions to the Federal work force and individual Federal retirees. This is the kind of information Congress needs to have on hand before significantly changing the way we tax Federal annuities.

Federal retirees and employees have been slapped with another inequity which they cannot bear and which they do not deserve. In 1985, Federal pay was frozen. Retirement annuities were frozen in recent years, too. Federal employees and retirees have been threatened with reduced pay adjustments, drug testing, benefit cuts, and other indignities. This is no way to treat a dedicated and talented work force. Our astronauts, drug enforcement agents, Social Security Administration personnel, scientists, physicians, air traffic controllers, and other Federal workers deserve better.

Last year, similar legislation was supported by many Federal employee organizations and was cosponsored by over 170 Members of the House. I ask all of my colleagues to join me in support of this important piece of legislation.

REINTRODUCTION OF THE ACT FOR BETTER CHILD CARE SERVICES

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be joined by Congresswoman OLYMPIA SNOWE in reintroducing the "Act for Better Child Care Services" [ABC].

When the 100th Congress convened in January 1987, the issue of child care was only a footnote to our national legislative agenda. Hearings on the issue, the introduction of the "Act for Better Child Care," and the widespread grass-roots support for a comprehensive national child care policy resulted in its rise to the forefront of our national agenda.

As the 101st Congress convenes, ensuring the safety of this Nation's children while their parents must participate in the work force remains a No. 1 priority. With the reintroduction of the "Act for Better Child Care" I reaffirm the principles embodied in this legislation. First, that children must have safe and healthy places to go while their parents are at work. Second, that we must increase the supply of quality child care and third, that we must increase the accessibility of child care for low- and moderate-income families.

Since 1966, the number of mothers in the work force has nearly doubled and the need for child care continues to increase. Currently, three-fourths of all mothers with children under the age of 6 are in the work force. This trend will continue. It is estimated that by 1995 two-thirds of all mothers with children under 6 will be in the work force.

We must provide a comprehensive solution to the growing child care crisis. If legislation is to be effective, it must address various facets of providing child care: Ensuring safe places for children; expanding resource and referral programs so that parents can access quality child care; training for the individuals who will have direct contact with the children in the programs; addressing caregiver salaries to reduce the overwhelming turnover rates in the child care profession; and leveraging business support for child care.

I look forward to working with all my colleagues who are interested in developing a sound child care policy for our Nation's children and invite them to join Congresswoman

OLYMPIA SNOWE and myself by consponsoring the "Act for Better Child Care."

ASSOCIATION OF ELDERLY CAREGIVERS

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to rise today to honor the Association of Elderly Caregivers, a New Jersey organization whose members have devoted themselves to the full-time care of elderly family members who are unable to care for themselves.

These caregivers not only provide companionship to the frail elderly, but assist them with such vital tasks as dressing, bathing, cooking, cleaning, as well as handling finances and giving medication. Although providing care to a loved one can be infinitely rewarding, it can also be physically and emotionally demanding.

The Association of Elderly Caregivers provides a forum for expressing the needs and concerns of those involved in caregiving. I am proud that New Jersey is home to this fine organization. As a member of the Select Committee on Aging, I look forward to working with the association to address issues of concern to our New Jersey seniors.

I would like to share the following brief description of the association and its members:

THE ASSOCIATION OF ELDERLY CAREGIVERS

The Association of Elderly Caregivers is an informal network of 75 to 100 men and women, largely in New Jersey, who are involved in the fulltime care of elderly family members.

Retired, semi-retired or prematurely retired, they are homebound in caring for spouses, parents or other family members, many with Alzheimer's Disease, who cannot be left alone, who for problems of expense, incontinence, wandering, behavorial problems, etc. are not eligible for Senior Day Centers and who are a matter of indifference to other family members who have chosen not to be involved in their care.

The Caregivers have responsible, largely professional backgrounds whose homebound care prevents them from regularly participating in more formal organizations, such as ADRDA (The Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association) or attending scheduled meetings.

But all, without exception, are responsible, registered, vote, maintain mail and telephone friendships, exchange views, write letters to editors, phone radio and television call-in programs and, through these and other means are, in fact, often regularly more active in their isolation than the too many others who are indifferent to the world outside them.

THE SAN MATEO TIMES CELEBRATES A CENTURY OF SERVICE TO SAN MATEO COUNTY

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, as we all know, 1989 is a special and a historic year for the U.S. Congress. It marks 200 years since the first Congress met in Philadelphia in 1789.

This year also marks an important anniversary for San Mateo County, CA, an event which is likewise a celebration of our democracy—the San Mateo Times will celebrate its centennial. Just as it is important that we mark the completion of the second century of our representative form of government established by the U.S. Constitution, it is significant to mark a century of service of the San Mateo Times. A free press, which is guaranteed in our Constitution, is a cornerstone of our democracy.

Mr. Speaker, in 1889 the San Mateo Leader became the first newspaper published in San Mateo County. Indicative of the opportunities that California provides, its founders were 20-year-old Charles Kirkbride and 17-year-old Charles Jury. During World War I, the new owner of the weekly Leader combined it with the first San Mateo County daily to establish the Daily News Leader. In 1901 a second weekly newspaper the San Mateo Times began to appear in the county, and by 1924 it, too, had become a daily.

In 1926 Horace W. Amphlett, who had become the publisher of the San Mateo Times, merged the Times with the Daily News Leader into a single newspaper: the San Mateo Times and Daily News Leader. The philosophy of service to the local community that guided the expanded newspaper was expressed by Publisher Amphlett: "Only such newspapers as fill a definite need in the community—supporting its institutions, safeguarding its interests, and protecting its character abroad—can hope to endure."

Horace Amphlett continued to guide the newspaper until his death in the 1930's. In 1944 J. Hart Clinton, Amphlett's brother-in-law and a staunch champion of freedom of the press, became publisher of the San Mateo Times. Under his leadership circulation has increased more than tenfold, and the printing plant has been modernized. In 1987, John Clinton replaced his father as publisher of the newspaper, and under his direction the newspaper is continuing its important service to San Mateo County.

Throughout the century of its service to the residents of San Mateo County, the newspaper has remained true to the principles of its original founders. The San Mateo Times and Daily News Leader/the Advance Star emphasizes local news of importance to San Mateo County but provides a broad selection of State, national, and international news for its readers.

Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues in the Congress to join me in paying well-deserved tribute to the San Mateo Times for its century of service to San Mateo County.

THE COOPER-HEWITT MUSEUM

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to authorize the Smithsonian Institution to plan and construct facilities for the Cooper-Hewitt Museum, and for other purposes.

In addition to authorizing planning and construction, this bill would also authorize appropriations of $15 million effective October 1, 1989. However, obligation of those funds could not be made until an equal amount is available from non-Federal sources.

Plans for construction at the Cooper-Hewitt would provide additional space to support collections and improve facilities for storage, research, exhibitions, education, and other activities.

Since the Cooper-Hewitt reopened to the public in 1976, the museum has produced numerable exhibitions that have brought the history of decorative arts and design to the attention of thousands of visitors. In their exhibitions, publications, and educational programs, the museum serves to underline the important role of design in our society. The Cooper-Hewitt Museum is a vital component in the educational and cultural matrix of not only New York, but of the Nation as a whole. Its important collections are recognized worldwide as outstanding by major architects, designers, artists, and by most of the major museums.

The physical limitations of the existing structure have made it virtually impossible to display its permanent collections. Storage of these collections is grossly inadequate, putting these valuable artifacts in considerable jeopardy. I had the opportunity to visit the Cooper-Hewitt Museum, and to my dismay, found that the only elevator used by both staff and to mobilize objects in the collection had been condemned. The storage facility is also threatened by faulty wiring, water damage, insufficient temperature control, and inadequate fire hazard protection. The priceless textiles, books, fabrics and jewelry that are stored in the structure are threatened everyday by the state of the area that surrounds it.

For too long in our country, there has been an intellectual bias directed toward the design arts, both commercial and industrial; the perception being that it is somehow below the status of the traditional fine arts of painting and sculpture.

The United States has become an important center for all areas of design and the decorative arts. American design artists have made monumental contributions. I believe that this country should have a museum dedicated solely to the exhibition and enhancement of the design field.

Design is the living art form. It becomes part of our everyday existence in the decisions we make—why we choose the clothes we wear or why we purchase a red car rather than a white one. We are all designers when we make an aesthetic decision about how something looks, whether it serves the particular intended function and how well the two are integrated.

We live in a competitive world market where design plays an integral role. Let's face it—design is important to our Nation's trade policy. The innovation of architects, industrial and interior designers, engineers and city planners, and so forth provide us with the products and initiative that boosts our domestic policy. It is important that we increase our Nation's competitiveness in industry, art and commerce. We must support museums unique as the Cooper-Hewitt in order to ensure the vitality of this country's talents.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly believe that there should be a place of prominence for artists concerned with design and the decorative arts in this country. This legislation will endorse the integrity and quality of just one entity of the Smithsonian Institution. The Cooper-Hewitt Museum and its collections represent an important national treasure that must be preserved for the enjoyment of all Americans who are concerned about the cultural life of our Nation.

AMENDMENT TO BALANCE FEDERAL BUDGET

HON. NORMAN D. SHUMWAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to introduce legislation providing for a constitutional amendment which would mandate that the Federal budget be balanced.

I am not proud of the fact that Congress seems to need a constitutional "cattle prod" to practice fiscal responsibility, but four decades of deficit spending make it clear that budgetary balance will not or cannot be achieved voluntarily. During the previous Congress, more than half the House membership indicated similar opinion by sponsoring constitutional amendments. Moreover, 85 percent of the American public has urged adoption of such an amendment.

Action taken by Congress—or, in this case, those not taken—play a critical role in maintaining confidence and general economic stability not only at home, but abroad. And, while numerous factors and efforts contribute to the total perception of reliability and stability, our burgeoning deficit, and our inability to control it, is a major culprit undermining that perception.

As introduced, this bill would require Congress and the President to agree that total outlays in any given fiscal year shall not exceed revenue estimates, unless three-fifths of both Houses vote otherwise. The measure would also limit taxes: no tax increase could go into effect without a majority vote in both Houses, by rollcall vote. Finally, the bill provides for systematic repayment of the national debt. All these provisions could be waived in time of war, a realistic observance.

If enacted, this legislation will not only tame the deficit—it will also ensure our children's futures, removing some of the mortgage now confronting them, and enhance our image as a responsible leader in the international community. I strongly urge my colleagues to join with me in endorsing this amendment.

PRODUCT LIABILITY CRISIS

HON. RICHARD T. SCHULZE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation addressing one particular segment of the product liability crisis. This crisis, hidden to our citizens in the cost of consumer goods, services and transportation, must be remedied immediately.

Today, a manufacturer remains liable when a product causing injury has outlived its normal economic life and been resold, repaired, worn-out, or even altered by its user. This unfounded liability, creating thousands of frivolous lawsuits, has become a detriment to society.

My legislation, entitled the Economic Statute of Repose Act, would limit manufacturer liability on a product to its economic life or depreciable period under section 168(g) of the Internal Revenue Code. The bill would unburden manufacturers from costly and undeserved liability insurance costs while still allowing injured citizens to sue responsible parties.

IMPROVING EFFECTIVENESS OF THE FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION

HON. TOM LEWIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that would remove the responsibility from the Federal Aviation Administration for promoting air commerce. This will have the impact of leaving the agency with essentially the responsibility for regulating and improving air safety only.

This is the same legislation that I introduced in the last Congress and the need for passage is even greater today.

There have been many suggestions on how to improve the effectiveness of FAA. The legislation that I am introducing today will address one problem by clarifying the mission of the agency and increase its effectiveness in improving air safety.

The legislation will repeal section 305 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. 1346). That section states:

> The Administrator is empowered and directed to encourage and foster the development of civil aeronautics and air commerce in the United States and abroad.

My concern is that this provision, as written, leads to conflicts with the mandated duty of regulating air safety. The legislation simply makes it clear that the major duty of the FAA Administrator is regulating air safety.

This change is needed for several reasons. First, it makes FAA's mission very clear—it is responsible for air safety. The recent tragic crash of Pan Am flight 103 generated several complaints that the agency was more concerned with the commercial impact of advertising the threat against flight 103 than with informing the public of the safety threat. It appears that the threat against flight 103 was not related to the bombing of the aircraft, nevertheless, many in the public do not perceive the agency as having air safety as its most important goal.

Second, the impact of the legislation will be to change FAA's emphasis on air safety. The safety record of the aviation industry continues to improve from the standpoint of safe passenger miles traveled. But today there are more white knuckle flyers than ever before and they are concerned over the adequacy of air safety. Most air travelers want even safer skies. But under the existing system, FAA must, on one hand, develop ways of improving air safety while, on the other hand, be concerned about the impact on encouraging air commerce.

The legislation I am introducing would clarify FAA's choice in that while the impact of its actions on the industry would still be a concern, the agency would not consider the impact on the encouragement of air commerce.

As the ranking Republican on the Transportation, Aviation and Materials Subcommittee, I have examined FAA's budget in great detail. As a consequence, I have come to the conclusion that it currently is deficient in both depth and breadth of air safety research. For example, there are no generic research programs directed toward making the cabin interior both fire resistant and one that will not produce toxic gases. In fact, there are essentially no appreciable long-term research programs, outside of national airspace system work, and one of the reasons, I have been informed, for this lack of activity, is a concern over the impact of the results on the encouragement of air commerce. However, my own informal surveys indicate that the traveling public will be happy to pay for any increased cost through ticket prices, if the cabin interior is made completely fire resistant.

The problem of the lack of long-range research projects was addressed in the last Congress with the passage of the Aviation Safety Research Act of 1988, Public Law 100-591.

The legislation I am introducing today is not a new or novel concept. For example, the Secretary of the Department of Transportation, James Burnley, has testified before congressional committees on several occasions last year on this issue. He stated in one hearing that—

> Because FAA is charged with promoting and protecting the industry's commercial interests, it is sometimes reluctant to take safety and enforcement actions that impose significant costs and burdens on that industry.

On another occasion Secretary Burnley used the example of FAA's own proposed change in restrictions that would have allowed 747's to remove two exit doors on the aircraft so that additional seats could be installed. The reason for the proposed change was commercial in nature and would have made the aircraft less safe.

In the Office of Technology Assessment's July 1988 report "Safe Skies Tomorrow," the recommendation was made that Congress may wish to consider "establishing the preeminence of the safety function in FAA's mandate, holding the Administrator accountable solely for safety. * * *" The legislation I am introducing accomplishes this goal.

I do not think that FAA should be in the business of promoting aviation commerce. That is clearly a job for the private sector. The major job of the FAA should be promoting safety. Even so, if the promotion of safety entails the recommendation of one brand name of technology over another, the legislative intent is that this is acceptable so long as the recommendation is based on safety considerations and not on the promotion of commerce-related issues.

Critics of the legislation say that the promotion of the commerce provision is necessary to provide checks and balances on the FAA regulatory process. They maintain that without the commerce provision FAA will regulate the industry into oblivion by requiring all reinforced steel aircraft that are capable of withstanding any collision with the ground.

However, this argument ignores the fact that there are checks and balances within the FAA procedures that, in my opinion, are sufficient to make sure that every view is heard within the agency.

For example, all rules proposed by FAA must follow the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act, which includes having the chance to participate in rule making and the right to judicial review of the rule. Moreover, title X of the Federal Aviation Act, addresses the procedures by which any person may appear before the agency and be heard; as well as judicial review of FAA orders. Consequently, there are established avenues for the industry representatives to make their views known within the agency and deletion of the provision on promoting commerce will have no effect on these avenues.

In addition, industry and the aviation community are in daily communication on an informal basis on a variety of issues.

I believe that the elimination of the provision that requires FAA to encourage air commerce will benefit the American flying public and will not have a negative impact on the industry.

Mr. Speaker, this is one step directed toward improving FAA and restoring the confidence of the American public in the safety of air travel. The legislation will benefit the industry, the agency and the flying public.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this important legislation.

ADMINISTRATIVELY UNCONTROLLABLE OVERTIME LEGISLATION

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing legislation which amends administratively uncontrollable overtime [AUO] pay for Federal law enforcement officers and FBI agents as discussed in section 5545, title V, United States Code.

As you are aware, employees of the Federal Bureau of Investigation are intricate and invaluable resources to our law enforcement system. Section 5545 of title V, United States Code provides for premium pay for an employee in a position requiring substantial irregular, unscheduled overtime which cannot be controlled administratively. This section of title V calls for such pay to be computed on the base pay on an entry level position, which happens to be the maximum level upon which AUO can be computed. As a result, practically all FBI agents are compensated for this overtime not only at a rate much less than straight time, but are limited to 25 percent of the base of an entry level salary, rather than 25 percent of their actual rate of pay.

FBI agents routinely log substantial amounts or irregular unscheduled overtime in performance of their Federal duties. Recent figures reveal that as a whole, they average about 2½ hours of AUO duty each day. While section 5545 provides a welcome measure of compensation for the many hundreds of additional hours required in their jobs annually, this form of overtime computes to an amount considerably less than straight time.

To ensure at least a small amount of relief from the substantial erosion in real pay—purchasing power—and benefits experienced in recent years, I am proposing legislation to adjust the arbitrary cut off point, enabling AUO to be figured on the prescribed percentage of an employee's current pay rate. This would remove the restrictions limiting this type of premium overtime pay from the minimum rate of entry level salary.

In closing, I would like to emphasize that my proposed amendment to section 5545 is not suggested to provide some slight measure of relief for just FBI agents, but for any Federal employee who falls under this provision. I hope all of my colleagues will join me in supporting this legislation.

INTRODUCTION OF THE LINE-ITEM RESCISSION ACT OF 1989

HON. TIM JOHNSON

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, today I am joined by a bipartisan group of our concerned colleagues in introducing the Line-Item Rescission Act of 1989. This bill would give the President a modified version of a line-item veto without having to amend the Constitution and without imposing on Congress a two-thirds vote obligation in order to override the rescission.

In the past, traditional line-item veto proposals have had a difficult time acquiring needed congressional support, in large part out of concern that the difficult burdens of producing a two-thirds majority to override and veto would result in an imbalance of power between the executive and legislative branches of Government. Nonetheless, many Members of Congress as well as President Reagan and former President Ford recognize that there should be a process by which individual budget lines may be considered on their own merits. Further, with enactment of the Line-Item Rescission Act, the President could play a more direct role in determining the contents of appropriations bills and share in the credit, or blame, for their contents.

Our bill would give the President the ability to determine which projects and programs included in an appropriations bill, a supplemental appropriations, bill, or a continuing resolution, should receive individual scrutiny by the Congress and the American public. Under our bill, the President could issue a rescission notice to the Congress on the day he signs the appropriations bill into law. Each rescission notice would be accompanied by a draft bill or joint resolution that would, if enacted, effectuate the proposed rescission. If the bill or joint resolution is not approved by a majority of Congress, the rescission would not take effect. Our bill would also require that these rescission bills be automatically discharged after a certain period of time for the full House or Senate's consideration.

Finally, our bill requires expedited action on all rescissions so that we have a prompt answer as to whether the project or program will be rescinded or remain in place.

This bill is an excellent alternative for those of us who cannot support a line-item veto and yet do want to address the problem of pork-barrel spending and lack of budget accountability in a meaningful, constructive manner. For those who do support a line-item veto, this bill presents an alternative approach which accomplishes many of the same goals but is politicaly much more "do-able."

INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO ASSIST THE HONORABLE GEORGE ARNEY

HON. FRANK HORTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, today I introduce a bill on behalf of my good friend and constituent, the Honorable George Arney, supervisor of the town of Sodus, NY. The bill seeks documentation for the boat which George purchased.

Federal law requires documentation for a commercial boat that was sold to a foreign owner at any time. Further, documentation of a vessel is similar to a deed to a property, and the boat cannot be used for financial collateral unless it is documented.

George's boat, the Terangi, was built in St. Petersburg, FL, and was documented by its first owner. Unfortunately, the next three owners of the boat, including two Canadians, failed to document it. Thus, it has been impossible for George to demonstrate an adequate chain of title for documentation. Importantly, the Terangi has never been docked outside of American waters. The Canadian owners kept the boat at Alexandra Bay on the St. Lawrence River.

By passing this bill, we can offer George some relief from his dilemma. George was unaware of the required documentation procedure at the time he purchased the Terangi, and it has caused him financial hardship ever since. Given the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I believe that providing this good man with his needed documentation is the only fair and equitable course of action to follow.

IN HONOR OF NED TAYLOR

HON. BRUCE A. MORRISON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, on January 7, the friends of Boy Scout Troop 401, based at Old Stone Church in East Haven, CT, will honor Edwin (Ned) Taylor for his more than 10 years of service to the troop and all of Boy Scouting and Cub Scouting. I join them in saluting this fine man.

Ned Taylor's involvement in Scouting began in 1974, when he became the leader of the Webelos at Cub Scout Pack 25 at St. Bernadette's Church in New Haven. Four years later, he assumed the additional responsibilities of Scoutmaster at Troop 401. Ned has also given much time to Boy Scouting's East Shore District organization. He has served as the chairman of the District's Cub Scout Olympics, Cub Scout Day Trek, and Cub Scout Bowl-a-thon. He has been active in organizing Boy Scout Camporees and has hosted Scouts from Taiwan and Switzerland.

Scouting has been an enjoyable experience for the boys in Ned's troop. In addition to regular Scouting activities, Ned has coordinated an annual camping trip to Maine, which regularly draws well over 100 Scouts and family members. Troop 401 also makes an annual trip to hike the 7½ mile Isaac Davis Trail in Action, MA.

Membership in Troop 401 during Ned's tenure has also involved a real commitment to the community. Ned directed the New Haven Handicappers Club, which conducted activities for disabled children, for over 10 years and has involved the troop in the East Haven food bank and the local Goodwill drive. The troop has been very active in the restoration of Fort Nathan Hale Park and in numerous other smaller restoration and fundraising projects.

Ned Taylor's approach to Scouting has been marked of achievement. Over Ned's 10 years as Scoutmaster, Troop 401 has produced a remarkable 27 Eagle Scouts and improved the lives of over 350 boys. Ned Taylor has a remarkable record of helping others. I hope that it can continue and that the Scouts of Troop 401 will continue to learn from his example.

INTRODUCTION OF ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGES PAY CLASSIFICATION

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing legislation which would amend the Federal Salary Act of 1967, and title 5 of the United States Code. This legislation would transfer the authority to determine the pay classification of Federal administrative law judges from the Office of Personnel Management to the Commission on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Salaries.

Administrative law judges occupy a unique position in our Federal work force in that they serve in the executive branch. In the days of George Washington, these officers were appointed to calculate import duties and determine which soldiers were disabled. Today, they hear and decide appeals from scores of decisions made by our Federal agencies each year, dealing with everything from the payment of Social Security to the regulations of utilities, the media, and interstate commerce.

To ensure their decisional independence, administrative law judges were classified under the General Schedule pay system, rather than the Senior Executive Service and do not, therefore, receive merit pay, bonuses, or performance evaluations. Moreover, to be entirely impartial, administrative law judges must be free from all political and employment pressures and control.

There is a continued need to keep administrative law judges independent and free from improper control by the agencies to which those judges are assigned, as well as from arbitrary actions of the OPM. Congress has always recognized the efficacy of an independent administrative judiciary. Such independence serves to structurally insulate ALJ's from the potential of agency retaliation for their decisions. To reassure private litigants of the impartiality of the ALJ employed by the opposing agency, to enhance the credibility of the administrative process, to remove any appearance of impropriety, and to maintain public confidence in the administrative process, Congress must continue to foster the independence of administrative law judges.

My legislation would authorize the independent Commission on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Salaries, rather than the Office of Personnel Management, to determine the pay classification of administrative law judges. No new obligations, rights, or privileges would be created by this transfer of authority. It follows on recommendations of the Federal Administrative Law Judges Conference and the judicial administration division of the American Bar Association. It is needed to solidify the independence of the ALJ's. To retain administrative law judges on the GS pay schedule tends to encourage their agencies to view them as other Government employees and to deal with them as much. Moreover, it nurtures unnecessary tension among ALJ's and other agency personnel who take an adversary role in litigation before them. Such dealings impede fair and impartial dispensing of justice. It is entirely appropriate, therefore, that the pay classification of administrative law judges be determined by an outside source, namely the Commission on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Salaries, which has studied and recommended the salaries of Federal judges in the judicial branch for years.

LEAKS AND CLASSIFIED INFORMATION

HON. BOB LIVINGSTON

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, during the last Congress, we heard talk about a new law requiring the President to notify Congress within 48 hours of any decision to authorize covert action. Whether or not you think this is a good idea, you will surely agree that we cannot tolerate leaks of sensitive classified information.

Today I am introducing legislation which imposes criminal penalties on any Member or other employee of Congress who receives and divulges classified information about covert operations. I believe that if the President must give notice of covert activities to Congress, then Members and staff should be required to keep it to themselves. If they violate this confidence, it is only fair that they face the possibility of a fine, imprisonment, or both.

Let's keep leaks out of the headlines of the Washington Post, We are talking about America's national security. Let's make anyone think twice before they endanger the lives of our agents or subvert our sensitive operations abroad.

REINTRODUCTION OF THE HOTEL AND MOTEL FIRE SAFETY ACT

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, on the first day of the 101st Congress, I am joining with Congressmen SHERWOOD BOEHLERT (R-NY) and ROBERT WALKER (R-PA) to reintroduce the Hotel and Motel Fire Safety Act, which was approved by the House during the last Congress but did not make it through the Congress as a whole. This bill would provide for the development of guidelines covering the installation of automatic sprinkler systems and smoke detectors in hotels and motels.

In the last Congress, Congressman BOEHLERT (R-NY) and I and former Representative MANUEL LUJAN, JR., (R-NM), now nominated by President-Elect BUSH as Secretary of the Interior, introduced H.R. 3704, the Hotel and Motel Fire Safety Act as a result of a hearings held by our Subcommittee on Science, Space, and Technology on the fire at the Dupont Plaza Hotel in San Juan, Puerto Rico where 97 Americans died in 12 minutes on New Year's Eve, 1986. Fire experts revealed that a simple sprinkler system would have prevented this tragedy. In response, the House of Representatives passed H.R. 3704 to ban the holding of federally funded meetings at hotels that failed to meet new fire safety guidelines to be issued by the U.S. Fire Administration requiring sprinkler systems and smoke alarms.

The Senate failed to take similar action, and the bill failed to become law in the last Congress.

Death from fire is one of the worst tragedies. It is even more tragic because so many deaths from fire simply need not happen. It is needless because we now have cost effective automatic sprinkler systems that effectively stop fires before they get going and before they snuff out a life. Yet the public in the United States remains at terrible risk from hotel fires. Despite the fact that there has never been multiple lives lost from a fire in a properly sprinklered building, and despite the public's instinctive and reasonable assumption that the hotels and motels that they check into are protected by reasonable means, most hotel rooms in the United States are not protected by sprinklers. It is time that public safety regulations caught up with public expectations.

When sprinklers can be installed for about the cost of purchasing new carpet, the Federal Government ought to be requiring sprinklers. The public has the right to expect fire safe hotels whenever and wherever they travel in this country. I am committed to working with my colleagues in the 101st Congress to reach this goal.

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT SMOKING ON COMMERCIAL AIRCRAFT FLIGHTS OF 2 HOURS OR LESS

HON. RICHARD J. DURBIN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, in 1987, Congress adopted an amendment I offered along with my colleague, BILL YOUNG, to prohibit smoking on commercial aircraft flights of 2 hours or less. Enactment of the airplane smoking ban was clearly a significant victory for the health and safety of America's airline passengers and crew.

This historic law was enacted for a 2-year period beginning in April 1988. Today, BILL YOUNG and I are introducing legislation that will permanently ban smoking on flights of 2 hours or less.

The airline smoking ban has been extremely well received by airline passengers and crew. The Federal Aviation Administration recently reported that only 57 passengers have been charged with smoking in an airplane restroom or tampering with a restroom smoke detector since the law went into effect. Only 35 passengers have been charged with smoking elsewhere on no-smoking flights. Considering that approximately 38 million passengers fly on U.S. airlines each month, the number of incidents have been very low.

We urge your support for this important legislation, which will assure that the health and safety of airline cabin crews and passengers flying on short-haul flights will be protected.

INTRODUCTION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES RECOGNITION WEEK

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing legislation which would declare the week of March 6–12, 1989, "Federal Employees Recognition Week." It is important that we set aside a week to recognize Federal employees' work. This recognition is appropriate and long overdue.

Mr. Speaker, during the last several years, Federal employees have faced repeated attempts to cut their pay, while staffing cutbacks have increased their workload. While I and many of my colleagues have fought to ensure decent treatment for Federal workers, we have not always been successful. Two years ago, Federal employees had their pay frozen and Federal retirees received no cost-of-living adjustment in their pension checks. Despite this, Federal workers have continued to perform duties vital to our Nation's well-being.

In closing, I believe it would be extremely valuable for the public and Congress to be reminded of how much we ask of our public servants. Declaring March 6–12 as "Federal Employees Recognition Week" will focus our attention, however briefly, on the efforts and achievements of the U.S. Government work force.

A TRIBUTE TO JULIAN WEINSTOCK

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Julian Weinstock, a good friend and community leader who will be honored by the University of Judaism on January 12, 1989, at the Eternal Light Dinner Dance.

As chairman of the board of Weinstock Construction, Julian has been instrumental in creating attractive, affordable residential communities. And while Julian's talents have led to an enormously successful business career, he has always set aside time to give back to his community by involving himself in causes that are dear to him.

As president and chairman of the board of the Medalian Group of Cedars-Sinai Hospital, Julian has worked to build one of the outstanding institutions of communal health.

Julian is also an active supporter of the United Jewish Fund, Vista Del Mar Child Care Service, City of Hope, and Sinai Temple. And, as a long-time friend of the University of Judaism, Julian, together with his wife Lois, has demonstrated his concern for educating young people to take their place as valuable members of the broader community. Julian played an important role in the University of Judaism's acquisition of the site of the Familian Campus and has served as a patron of the university ever since.

Among Julian and Lois' most significant contributions to this world are five wonderful children: Brian, who has already joined Weinstock Construction as its president, and Elaine Gray, Bradley, Darren, and Elisabeth who are completing their education.

Julian is truly one of the leading builders of our community in more ways than one and it is a pleasure to bring his numerous accomplishments to the attention of my colleagues in the House of Representatives. I ask that the Speaker and Members of this body join me in saluting Julian and his wife Lois for their outstanding dedication and devotion to the needs of the community and to wish them much success in all their future endeavors.

HARRY SCHWARTZ: ADVOCATE, EDUCATOR, COMMUNITY LEADER, AND POLITICAL ACTIVIST

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to my good friend, Harry Schwartz, whose tireless efforts on behalf of the Brooklyn shorefront community have made him an admired and respected leader. Bensonhurst West End Community Council recently honored Harry as their "Man of the Year" for community activities over the last two decades. I want to join my shorefront friends in saluting this outstanding humanitarian.

At a time when people are beginning to think seriously about educational reform, the accomplishments of Harry Schwartz seem all the more impressive. Harry could, in fact, offer lessons based on real world experience on how to revitalize an urban public school district.

Nothing is closer to Harry's heart, except his family, than the Brooklyn school children. Harry served as a public school teacher for over 20 years before joining the District 21 School Board. His strong commitment to our youth has helped reinvigorate several youth organizations, and as chairman of Community Board 13's Effective Youth Committee, Harry has helped bring thousands of dollars into the area. Harry has made a difference in lives of hundreds, no thousands, of Brooklyn citizens.

Harry Schwartz is the very rare individual that distinguishes himself to the point where he becomes a local neighborhood institution. Harry is an independent man who wears many hats—advocate, teacher, community leader, and political activist. People trust Harry—because he always speaks his mind.

I am pleased to salute Harry Schwartz today for his selfless devotion to the Brooklyn shorefront. I also consider myself lucky to call him a friend and look forward to working with him to improve Brooklyn for many more years. "Give 'em hell, Harry."

TRIBUTE TO NORMAN MEGEGAT

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 3, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Mr. Norman Menegat, who is retiring after serving the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for 34 years. Through his position at the University of Massachusetts' Data Processing Center, Mr. Menegat has enriched the lives of many with his commitment and devotion to the educational community.

The University of Massachusetts-Amherst has truly benefited from Mr. Menegat's expertise as a manager and innovator. It was through his leadership, inspiration, and guidance that a highly technical computer system was integrated into the university. Norman Menegat has established himself as a dedicated individual committed to the ideals of higher education.

Through his outstanding achievements as an administrator and citizen, Norman Menegat has earned the respect of the entire Commonwealth. In recognition of his 34 years of loyal service, Norman recently received the 1988 Commonwealth of Massachusetts Citation for Outstanding Performance. I was pleased to see Mr. Menegat honored for more than three decades of uninterrupted services to University of Massachusetts and the State.

On January 10, Norman Menegat will be honored by his many friends and family at a special retirement celebration in Amherst, MA. I want to join in paying tribute to this outstanding individual and to wish Norman a very happy and rewarding retirement.

SENATE—Wednesday, January 4, 1989

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 3, 1989)

The Senate met at 12 noon, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

* * * in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength * * *.—Isaiah 30:15.

Be still, and know that I am God * * *.—Psalm 46:10.

Gracious Father in Heaven, let this quiet moment as the Senate opens be more than a formality to be gotten out of the way for more important business. Deliver us from pride which feels no need of God, equating it with weakness. Imbue us with the wisdom which understands God is our strength who "gives to all life and breath and all things."

Make Thy presence felt in this Chamber—in this building—in all the offices. Thy will be done on Earth as it is in Heaven.

Grant it, Lord, in Your name, to Your glory and the blessing of the Nation. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the standing order, the majority leader is recognized for not to exceed 10 minutes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority leader is recognized.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 4—PROVIDING FOR A RECESS OF THE CONGRESS FROM JANUARY 4, 1989, UNTIL JANUARY 20, 1989

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be considered the following concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the concurrent resolution.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4) amending Senate Concurrent Resolution 3.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), Notwithstanding provisions of Senate Concurrent Resolution 3, the Senate may stand in recess at the close of business on January 4, 1989, until 3 p.m. on January 20, 1989, as provided in Senate Concurrent Resolution 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to proceeding immediately to the consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4) was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as in executive session,

I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the following two treaties transmitted to the Senate on January 3, 1989, by the President:

Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts Against the Safety of Maritime Navigation, with related protocol (Treaty Document No. 101-1); and ILO Convention (No. 160) Concerning Labor Statistics (Treaty Document No. 101-2).

I also ask that the two conventions be considered as having been read the first time; that they be referred, with accompanying papers, to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and that the President's messages be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the several requests of the majority leader will be agreed to. The injunction of secrecy will be lifted, and the referral request will be agreed to.

The messages of the President are as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation, and the related Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Fixed Platforms Located on the Continental Shelf, signed at Rome on March 10, 1988. I also transmit, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Department of State with respect to the Convention and Protocol.

The seizure of the Italian cruise ship Achille Lauro in 1985, and the murder of American passenger Leon Klinghoffer, demonstrated that no country, or form of transportation, is immune from the criminal savagery of those who engage in terrorist acts. This Convention is aimed at ensuring that those who engage in such acts on board or against ships engaged in navigation are brought to justice. The Protocol would do the same with respect to acts on or against fixed platforms on the continental shelf. Modeled on earlier conventions dealing with aircraft hijacking and sabotage (to which the United States is a party), they include provisions requiring States to provide severe punishment for such offenses, and to extradite or prosecute those who commit them.

Work on the Convention and Protocol began in 1986 under the auspices of the International Maritime Organization on the basis of an initial draft cosponsored by the Governments of Italy, Austria, and Egypt. That work was completed, and the Convention and Protocol adopted by consensus, at an international conference in Rome in March 1988. The United States and 22 other States signed the Convention at that time, and the United States and 20 other States signed the Protocol. It is clear that the Convention already has broad support in the international community, and it is hoped that all States will join in this major step to deter acts against the safety of maritime navigation.

I recommend, therefore, that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to this Convention and Protocol and give its advice and consent to ratification.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 3, 1989.

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the Convention (No. 160) Concerning Labor Statistics, adopted by the International Labor Conference at Geneva on July 25, 1985. I transmit also for the Senate's information a certified copy of the recommendation (No. 170) on the same subject, adopted by the International Labor Conference on the same date, which amplifies some of the Convention's provisions. No action is called for on the recommendation.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

The report of the Department of State, with a letter from the Secretary of Labor, concerning the Convention is enclosed.

As explained more fully in the enclosed letter from the Secretary of Labor, the Government of the United States already collects, compiles and publishes basic labor statistics in all nine subject areas covered by Convention 160. Ratification of this Convention, therefore, would not require the United States to alter in any way its law or practice in this field.

Moreover, as I stated in transmitting International Labor Organization (ILO) Convention 144 to the Senate on April 10, 1986, ratification by the United States of so few ILO Conventions makes more difficult our attempts to take other governments to task for failing to comply with ILO instruments they have ratified. In part for this reason, the Senate gave its advice and consent to the ratification of ILO Convention 144. I accordingly recommend that the Senate also give its advice and consent to the ratification of ILO Convention 160.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 3, 1989.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

A COMMUNICATION FROM THE ADMINISTRATOR OF GENERAL SERVICES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Administrator of General Services transmitting, pursuant to law, certified copies of the final ascertainment of the Electors for President and Vice President, which are ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say for the record that on January 3, 1989, while the Senate was in recess, the oath of office was administered to EDWARD M. KENNEDY, as the Senator from Massachusetts.

The majority leader is recognized.

RECESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 12:40 p.m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those in favor of the motion say "Aye." Those opposed say "No." The ayes have it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconvene at 3 p.m., following the recessing of the joint session of the Congress in the House Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE DEPARTURE OF JOHN MELCHER FROM THE SENATE

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, today I rise with great sadness to bid farewell to my friend and colleague, John Melcher of Montana. Senator Melcher is one of those rare individuals who is willing to take on the issues that don't bring headlines and glamour. He diligently works on problems that are facing the people of this country every day. John Melcher may be leaving the U.S. Senate, but his dedication to the people of Montana and his contribution to public service will not be forgotten.

Mr. President, I am sure that I speak the feelings of many of my colleagues when I say that Senator Melcher will be missed here in the Senate. John Melcher was elected to the House of Representatives in 1969 where he served until his election to the U.S. Senate in 1976. Since his arrival in the Senate, Senator Melcher has been a leader in both the Agriculture and Energy Committees. In these assignments he has protected the rights of farmers in Montana and fought for fairness in public power systems by preserving rural and municipal utilities. He has also served as chairman of the Special Committee on Aging and has fought tirelessly on behalf of our older Americans. While I have not had the pleasure of serving on a committee with Senator Melcher, I have seen the results of his efforts on the Senate floor.

To conclude my statement, I would like to extend to my friend from Montana good luck in his future endeavors and best wishes to him and his family.●

A TRIBUTE TO CONGRESSMAN BILL NICHOLS: A MAN OF INTEGRITY

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Congressman Bill Nichols, a member of the Alabama delegation whom we recently lost to a sudden heart attack. Bill Nichols will be remembered as one of Alabama's most outstanding Congressmen. Throughout his 22-year political career, Nichols illustrated to his State and to his colleagues that he was a man of integrity, as well as, a man of great compassion. Quite simply, Bill Nichols dedicated his entire life to serving his country.

Before entering a life of politics, Bill Nichols demonstrated his commitment to his country by joining the U.S. Army. He was one of many young American soldiers who saw action on the battlefields of World War II. Although Nichols tragically lost his left leg to a land mine, he was a man of great courage and was rewarded by his country. For his service in the war, Nichols received a Bronze Star and a Purple Heart—badges of extreme honor. Serving in the U.S. Army was only natural for this great man who so strongly believed in the democratic principles which govern this great Nation.

This dedication to his country propelled Bill into the forefront of Alabama politics. He served in Alabama's State Legislature and was recognized as the most outstanding member of the Alabama Senate in 1965. The following year the people of Alabama wisely sent him to Congress, where he was reelected to each succeeding Congress.

While in Washington, Bill Nichols became a formidable and highly respected member of the House Armed Services Committee. His record was one of strength on the most vital decisions that affect our national security. On many occasions, he was called upon by America's leaders to offer his counsel on defense policy. Nichols received nationwide attention for his outstanding leadership ability in military matters when this country was rocked by a defense procurement scandal in 1986. As chairman of the House Subcommittee on Investigations, Bill Nichols worked tirelessly to insure that the system would not break down in the future. Nichols was responsible for drafting a landmark piece of legislation which restructured the positions of command in the Pentagon and military services. The measure became known as the Goldwater-Nichols Defense Reorganization Act.

Bill Nichols was a model public servant. He will be remembered for his enormous strength and quiet intensity, as well as, for his remarkable ability to get the job done and to do it well. His dedication and commitment to his country mark him as one of our Nation's great leaders.

I am proud that I had the opportunity to work with Bill Nichols these past 10 years in Congress. He was a valuable friend whose advice I sought on many occasions. I will miss him.

My heart goes out to Bill's wife, Carolyn, and his three children, Memorie, Margaret, and Flynt. Their grief is shared by all those who were touched by Bill Nichols' life.●

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take a limited number of 1-minute speeches.

PLO INTIMIDATION OF PALESTINIANS SUPPORTING PEACE WITH ISRAEL

(Mr. LEVINE of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, when the United States opened a dialog with the PLO, most observers suggested that the true test would be Mr. Arafat's actions rather than Mr. Arafat's rhetoric. Regrettably, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Arafat has failed the first test of whether he is truly serious about peace in the Middle East.

Rather than renounce the PLO's practice of intimidation and assassination, yesterday, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Arafat reinforced that practice. Instead of welcoming an initiative by a prominent West Bank mayor, Elias Freij, for a 1-year truce between Israelis and Palestinians, Mr. Arafat stated that, "Any Palestinian leader who proposes an end to the intifada exposes himself to the bullets of his own people and endangers his life. The PLO will know how to deal with him."

Mr. Speaker, rather than renouncing terror, Arafat embraced it. Arafat clearly wants to retain and to use his longstanding weapon of assassination of his own people as an important weapon in the PLO's arsenal for controlling local Arab leaders.

Mr. Speaker, the world either does not see or chooses to ignore the intimidation and terror Palestinians and the PLO have long inflicted upon those of their brethren who seek coexistence and cooperation with Israel.

For real progress in this troubled region, Mr. Speaker, these terrorist methods must be renounced and removed.

QADHAFI AGAIN SHOWS HE IS A LITTLE TYRANT

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, Qadhafi has done it again. He has provoked the United States into a defensive action off the coast of Libya, way deep into international waters, with the intent again to show that he is a little tyrant who feels he can do anything he wants even to a superpower like the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the evidence, although not completely in, indicates that this was a purely defensive action on the part of the United States military establishment in the Mediterranean, and I for one, and I know most of us, will support the President of the United States, not only in defending the action but in insisting on further action if necessary to demilitarize that chemical weapons factory now in existence in Libya.

WORLD WAR I VETERANS' SERVICE PENSION ACT

(Mr. ANDERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce, again, the World War I Veterans' Service Pension Act for the veterans of the First World War and their widows.

Almost 5 million American soldiers fought in World War I. Under 100,000 are still alive today. We have never honored our historical responsibilities to these veterans.

From the beginning of this Nation, through the Spanish-American War, our Government provided an old-age pension to all wartime veterans, in just recognition of their service in defending our freedoms.

After World War II, we realized a need to compensate veterans much sooner after their service, and we established home loans, educational benefits, and a variety of other programs.

Under current programs, however, nearly 60 percent of our World War I veterans are not eligible for these benefits from the Veterans' Administration, because their incomes are too high. Too high at $6,200 a year? How many people do you know who can survive on $6,200 a year?

Do not these veterans deserve better? Each day we postpone this legislation, 200 of these valiant men will die, in need and forgotten—forgotten by the country which they did not forget in its time of need.

My bill will provide $150 a month for veterans and $100 a month for their widows. It is hardly a magnificent sum. However, it will make a substantial difference to most of these veterans. It will make a moral difference to all of them, whether they receive it or not.

World War I veterans, their families and I would greatly appreciate your support in the 101st Congress. I am all too aware that time is running out on these great patriots. Hopefully, this will be the year that Congress decides to honor the veterans of World War I by passing my legislation, the World War I Veterans' Service Pension Act.

COUNTING ELECTORAL VOTES—JOINT SESSION OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE HELD PURSUANT TO THE PROVISIONS OF SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 1

At 1 o'clock p.m., the Doorkeeper, the Honorable James T. Molloy, announced the Vice President and the Senate of the United States.

The Senate entered the Hall of the House of Representatives, headed by the Vice President and the Secretary of the Senate, the Members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

The VICE PRESIDENT took his seat as the Presiding Officer of the joint convention of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying the chair on his left.

The joint session was called to order by the Vice President.

□ 1300

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Mr. Speaker and Members of Congress, the Senate and the House of Representatives, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and the laws of the United States, are meeting in joint session for the purpose of opening the certificates and ascertaining and counting the votes of the electors of the several States for President and Vice President.

Under well-established precedents, unless a motion shall be made in any case, the reading of the formal portions of the certificates will be dispensed with. After ascertainment has been had that the certificates are authentic and correct in form, the tellers will count and make a list of the votes cast by the electors of the several States.

The tellers on the part of the two Houses will take their places at the Clerk's desk.

The tellers, Mr. STEVENS and Mr. FORD on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ANNUNZIO and Mr. FRENZEL on the part of the House, took their places at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hands to the tellers the certificates of the electors for President and Vice President of the State of Alabama, and they will count and make a list of the votes cast by that State.

Senator FORD (One of the tellers). Mr. President, the certificate of the electoral vote of the State of Alabama seems to be regular in form and authentic, and it appears therefrom that GEORGE BUSH of the State of Texas received 9 votes for President and Dan Quayle of the State of Indiana received 9 votes for Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the Chair will omit in the further procedure the formal statement just made, and we will open the certificates in alphabetical order and pass to the tellers the certificates showing the votes of the electors in each State; and the tellers will then read, count, and announce the result in each State as was done with respect to the State of Alabama.

Is there objection?

The Chair hears no objection.

There was no objection.

The tellers then proceeded to read, count, and announce, as was done in the case of the State of Alabama, the electoral votes of the several States in alphabetical order.

□ 1320

The VICE PRESIDENT. Members of the Congress, the certificates of all the States have now been opened and read, and the tellers will make final ascertainment of the result and deliver the same to the President of the Senate.

The tellers delivered to the President of the Senate the following statement of the results:

ALBERT CROSS RETIRES AS PRESIDENT OF THE MONTEREY PENINSULA HERALD

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of my colleagues the retirement of Albert Cross, the president of the Monterey Peninsula Herald in Monterey, CA.

Al Cross has served as president of the Herald since 1984, and the paper has thrived under his leadership. The Monterey Peninsula relies on the Herald as an indispensable source of local, State, and national news, and Al Cross can take a lot of credit for its status. The Herald is my home town newspaper, and I am proud of the work done by its reporters and editors as well as those who run the business side of the paper.

Al Cross was born in Missouri and began his newspaper career on a weekly newspaper in Weston, MO, in 1948. He subsequently worked on several newspapers in New Mexico and then joined the Blade in Toledo, OH, in 1952. The Blade and the Herald are both owned by Block Newspapers.

After 19 years with the Blade, Al joined the Herald as managing editor in October 1971. He was named executive editor of the paper in May 1980, and was elected a vice president of the company that same year. In November 1981 he returned to the Blade as executive editor, a position he held for 20 months, after which he returned to Monterey as general manager of the Herald. In December 1984, he was elected president of the Monterey Peninsula Herald Co.

Al is a director of the California Newspaper Carrier Foundation and a past director of the California Newspaper Publishers Association. He has also been active in the Associated Press Managing Editors Association and the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

Al and his wife, Mildred, reside in Monterey.

Mr. Speaker, I know my colleagues join me in wishing Al Cross a comfortable and productive retirement. He has certainly earned it.

NOISE REDUCTION IN ALAMEDA, CA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to encourage the Port of Oakland to reduce noise in residential areas near the Oakland International Airport.

A simple solution to the noise problem exists that will satisfy residents without unduely impeding airport operations. By diverting night flights to runways with an approach over the San Francisco Bay, the airport can promote peace and quiet in residential neighborhoods while still accommodating air traffic. For years, the Port of Oakland has dragged its feet in addressing the airport noise problem. It is now time that Oakland International join with airports around the Nation in becoming a responsible neighbor to the surrounding communities.

H.R. —

A bill to prohibit the Secretary of Transportation from making airport development grants to the Port of Oakland until the Port of Oakland enters into a agreement with the Secretary relating to air traffic at Oakland International Airport

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. GRANT AGREEMENT.

The Secretary of Transportation shall not make a grant under the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 for an airport development project involving the Oakland International Airport, Oakland, California, until the Port of Oakland enters into an agreement satisfactory to the Secretary which ensures that all aircraft which use such airport between the hours of 10 o'clock post meridian and 7 o'clock anti meridian land only at runways 27L, 27R, and 29 and take off from runways 9L, 9R, and 29.

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE PERIOD OF AGREEMENT.

An agreement entered into under section 1 must remain in effect during the longer of—

(1) the period beginning on the date of approval of the grant application under the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 and ending on the last day of the useful life of the project for which such grant is sought; and

(2) the 20-year period beginning on such date of approval.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

H.R. 33, INTEGRITY IN DRUG TESTING

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL
OF MICHIGAN

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I joined with my distinguished colleague from Virginia, TOM BLILEY, in introducing H.R. 33, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish standards for the certification of laboratories engaged in urine drug testing. H.R. 33 seeks to ensure that when drug testing is done the results will be accurate, and that when errors occur the responsible party is held to account.

Our legislation is patterned after the provisions of section 10006 of the House omnibus drug bill, which we passed last September. That section enjoyed broad bipartisan support in the House. Similarly, Senators on both sides of the aisle expressed support for the establishment of drug testing laboratory standards during the negotiations on the omnibus bill. While it became necessary in the final hours before adjournment to delete section 10006 from the omnibus drug legislation, these Senators promised to work with us in the 101st Congress to achieve the goals of our provision.

The introduction yesterday of H.R. 33 represents the first step in bringing order, accuracy, and integrity to urine drug testing. Regardless of our individual views on drug testing generally, or on Government-mandated drug testing in particular, the fact is that urine drug testing has become a prevalent tool for ascertaining whether an individual has recently used illegal drugs. It is also a tool susceptible of great abuse if it is not handled knowledgably and properly.

In contrast to ordinary medical testing, the consequences that can flow from an inaccurate drug test may be devastating. The mere hint of some prior drug use, whether or not accurate, can literally destroy a test subject's livelihood and reputation. Similarly, numerous false negatives may undermine the goals of a drug testing program. And yet, while we regulate clinical laboratories in their performance of medical testing, the additional safeguards necessary for the proper performance of forensic urine drug testing are today largely a matter of the test subject's "luck of the draw."

An individual asked or required to provide a urine specimen for a drug test may or may not be protected by a proper chain of custody for that specimen. The individual may or may not know to which laboratory the specimen is being sent. The laboratory may or may not conform to good, state of the art analytical practice. The employer, organization, agency, or other party conducting the drug testing program may or may not understand the limits of drug testing technology or the reasons that errors occur—and errors do occur, as any reputable toxicologist will readily admit.

In hearings before our Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations, Mr. BLILEY and I have heard testimony and seen evidence of the havoc that a false positive result can wreak on an innocent individual's life. We have seen a major employer, who in good faith pursued the proper course in selecting a laboratory using expert medical assistance, nonetheless held liable to an employee for a false positive because the laboratory failed to perform the confirmatory test for which the employer had paid.

Other horror stories abound. At the Department of Transportation, a veteran air traffic controller was falsely accused of drug use following a urine test. He was rescued from dismissal only because his supervisor challenged the results and discovered a clerical error on the part of the laboratory. At Fort Belvoir, two outstanding officer candidates had their military careers destroyed by positive drug test results, despite evidence of foul play in the laboratory. The former director of the forensic toxicology unit at DOT's Civil Aeromedical Institute in Oklahoma City claimed that confirmation tests were being performed on specimens when the lab did not even have the equipment or personnel to do those tests. He was caught and pleaded guilty to falsifying test results.

We know from our hearings, as well, that specimens get lost, misplaced, and even stolen. Laboratories may falsely claim that the quality or urine supplied was inadequate to permit retesting. Accessioning—the initial identification, racking, and preparation for testing of specimens received by the lab—may be characterized by shoddy or careless practices.

The Committee on Government Operations issued a report last year recommending that proficiency standards be adopted for drug testing laboratories operating in the private sector. Following hearings chaired by the gentleman from Oklahoma, [Mr. ENGLISH], the committee concluded that many drug testing programs use only inexpensive and unreliable screening tests without obtaining necessary confirmation using more accurate, but more expensive, equipment. The committee's report found that "[c]areless actions such as lack of refrigeration, reversed labels, contaminated tools, and faulty recording of results may cause inaccurate results."

Yet, Mr. Speaker, at the present time, national certification and quality standards for drug testing laboratories do not exist, and only 11 States regulate drug testing at all. These 11 States limit the application of their laws to workplace drug testing. And even among the 15 States that purport to regulate clinical laboratories, the extent and quality of such regulation varies tremendously.

H.R. 33 is designed to address these grave problems. It would establish a certification program for laboratories that engage in urine drug testing. The Secretary of Health and Human Services would be authorized to implement the certification program directly or to approve State agencies and private, nonprofit entities as accrediting bodies to act on the Secretary's behalf. The legislation would mandate that after a reasonable period of time, during which laboratories could seek certification, it would be unlawful to use a noncertified lab to perform a urine drug test. The bill provides further essential protections for test subjects whose rights are violated, including civil and criminal penalties and, in certain cases, a private right of action. And it allows the Secretary to permit or require recognized accrediting bodies to maintain standards more protective of the rights of test subjects than those provided in the certification program. Test subjects themselves could similarly contract for more protective arrangements.

The legislation adopts as its model for this certification program the guidelines promulgated last year by HHS to govern drug testing in the Federal workplace. Those guidelines were issued pursuant to congressional action in the 1987 supplemental appropriations bill, and HHS last month approved its first batch of 10 laboratories now certified to perform drug testing for Federal agencies. The HHS guidelines represent the best and most current thinking in the field of forensic toxicology. They are the state of the art. And they therefore provide a sound basis for extension to drug testing in the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend from Virginia, Mr. BLILEY, for his close cooperation and involvement in this issue and this legislation. While we have very different views as to the utility and propriety of drug testing in certain circumstances, we have put those differences aside because we share a common goal—assuring that if drug testing is to be done, that it be reliable, accurate, and fair.

We will be seeking cosponsors for H.R. 33 in the near future and plan to move the bill through our committee and to the floor at the earliest possible date. I hope that my colleagues will join us in support of this important measure. I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section analysis of H.R. 33 be printed in the RECORD immediately following this statement. Thank you.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF H.R. 33

A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish standards for the certification of laboratories engaged in drug testing, and for other purposes.

Section 1. Standards for Certification of Laboratories Engaged in Drug Testing.

This section adds to Title V of the Public Health Service Act a new Part E, titled "Drug Testing." The new Part E consists of new sections 551 through 557.

SECTION 551—CERTIFICATION PROGRAM

Subsection (a) of the new section 551 requires that the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS), not later than one year after enactment, establish a program for the certification of laboratories performing toxicological urinalysis for drug testing programs. This certification program is required, to the maximum extent practicable, to conform to the existing HHS guidelines for federal workplace drug testing and to treat any person conducting a drug testing program in the same manner as the HHS guidelines treat the federal agencies to which they are applicable. These HHS guidelines were developed by the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration and are therefore referred to in the bill as the "ADAMHA guidelines."

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Subsection (b) provides that the certification program shall also: (1) allow access by any test subject to certain relevant records; (2) provide that the Secretary in considering applications for certification shall consider whether the applicant has previously owned or operated a laboratory which has had its certification revoked; (3) permit the Secretary to approve State agencies and private, nonprofit entities as accrediting bodies to act on the Secretary's behalf in implementing the certification program; (4) require the Secretary to oversee the performance of any such body; and (5) allow the Secretary access to records necessary to the performance of such oversight.

Subsection (b) further provides that unless a laboratory engages solely in urine drug testing, the laboratory is required to be certified under the Clinical Laboratory Improvement Act (section 353 of the Public Health Service Act) in order to become certified under this section.

Subsection (c) permits the Secretary to take into consideration any special factors or circumstances applicable to the testing of participants in amateur athletic competition that warrant separate or different treatment in the certification program.

Subsection (d) directs the Secretary to revise the requirements of the certification program to reflect improvements in drug testing methods.

SECTION 552—SANCTIONS

Subsection (a) of the new section 552 prohibits any person from performing any toxicological urinalysis in connection with any drug testing program unless that person is a laboratory certified under section 551.

Subsection (b) establishes several protections for test subjects by making it unlawful to engage in certain conduct, including breaching the confidentiality of test results (except in certain specified circumstances), knowingly altering or falsely reporting test results, knowingly adulterating urine specimens, knowingly performing or causing to be performed on a urine specimen a test for any medical condition or any substance other than drugs or alcohol without the consent of the person providing the specimen following full disclosure, taking adverse action against any test subject for refusing to give such consent (except in certain specified circumstances), taking adverse action against any test subject based upon a positive result that has not been confirmed by gas chromatography/mass spectrometry, or otherwise knowingly failing to administer or conduct any urine drug test or testing program in accordance with the requirements of the certification program established under new section 551. Civil and criminal penalties are provided for violations of this section.

SECTION 553—CIVIL ACTIONS

Subsection (a) of new section 553 provides for a private right of action by any test subject who is tested or whose test results are handled in violation of, or is deprived of rights under, section 552 or the certification program.

Subsection (b) authorizes the Secretary to bring actions to restrain violations.

Subsection (c) provides for the indemnification by a laboratory of any person conducting a drug testing program who is found liable to a test subject for a false positive result.

SECTION 554—CONSTRUCTIONS

Subsection (a) of new section 554 provides that nothing in the new Part E limits the authority of the Secretary to permit or require an approved accrediting body to maintain standards, procedures, or requirements more protective of the rights of test subjects than those provided under the certification program or under section 552. Similarly, the subsection permits test subjects and their representatives to contract for more protective arrangements.

Subsection (b) provides that the certification program shall supersede the ADAMHA guidelines and any other relevent law to the extent that it imposes more protective standards, procedures, or requirements.

SECTION 555—STATE LAW

New section 555 prohibits States and local governments from adopting or enforcing any law relating to the certification of drug testing laboratories, or relating to requirements for the conduct of drug testing under the certification program, which is different from such certification program.

SECTION 556—FEES

New section 556 establishes a system of certification fees to ensure that this program will be budget-neutral.

SECTION 557—DEFINITIONS

New section 557 defines the following terms: blank specimen, controlled substance, drug, drug testing program, false positive result, person, proficiency challenge, spiked specimen, test subject, and toxicological urinalysis.

Section 2. Effective Date.

Except as specified below, the provisions of the bill would take effect on the date of enactment. The prohibitions on the use of a non-certified laboratory, on the disclosure of test results by a person involved in drug testing or a drug testing program, and on the administration or conduct of any drug test or drug testing program except in accordance with the requirements of the certification program would not take effect for one year following the establishment of the certification program under section 551.

IN SUPPORT OF H.R. 33, THE DRUG TESTING LABORATORY CERTIFICATION ACT

HON. THOMAS J. BLILEY, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with our distinguished chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee in introducing legislation to establish standards for the certification of drug testing laboratories. During the last Congress, the chairman and I collaborated on a similar drug laboratory standards program. This proposal received broad bipartisan support in the House and was included in the omnibus drug bill (H.R. 5210) as passed by the House on September 22. Unfortunately, these provisions were deleted during negotiations on a final bill with the Senate.

Private drug testing is becoming more and more widespread. The companies that choose to conduct drug testing programs and the employees who comply with these drug tests are both entitled to the same protections that are already accorded to Federal workers under the comprehensive guidelines published by the Secretary of HHS on April 11, 1988; that is, drug tests should be analyzed by laboratories that meet minimum quality standards. Essentially, the bill extends the existing Federal guidelines to the private sector. However, the bill grants the Secretary sufficient flexibility to revise the program requirements as needed to improve program reliability and efficacy.

Other key characteristics of the program include:

First, the Secretary may designate private accrediting bodies to conduct the certification program;

Second, the cost of the certification and oversight are financed by a user fee system. Thus, the budget impact will only entail a small amount of startup, administrative costs;

Third, the program includes protection for employees and reasonable remedies against violations of their rights, such as breaches in confidentiality;

Fourth, it provides for rigorous quality standards for drug testing laboratories and oversight of the certification process by the Secretary; and

Fifth, it allows for special accommodations for drug testing in conjunction with amateur and professional athletics.

It is also important to note that this legislation is neutral with respect to under what circumstances drug testing is or is not appropriate. The purpose of this legislation is not to either encourage or discourage drug testing.

I believe that this bill will ultimately enhance the integrity and effectiveness of existing drug testing programs. I commend the gentleman from Michigan for his interest in this important matter, and I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

IN RECOGNITION OF VERNON E. BURTON

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Mr. Vernon E. Burton, who has served California agriculture as an extension farm adviser and entomologist for 38 years.

Mr. Burton's outstanding contributions include the development of innovative methods and strategies for nematode control in cotton, which have improved production while reducing pesticide use. He also aided in the development and establishment of treatment thresholds for green peach aphid on sugar, and established and supervised the cotton pest management project in the San Joaquin Valley in the 1970's. That work resulted in the appropriation of permanent Federal funds for an integrated pest management program.

Other successes of Mr. Burton's work include more effective and efficient control of lygus bugs and spider mites on dry beans, development of a successful pest management program on Burbank potatoes, and investigations on an aphid believed to be a serious insect pest on small grains. Mr. Burton helped prove that the aphid actually had no significant impact on grain yields and thereby insecticide use was markedly reduced.

Over the years he has provided support and guidance to county programs conducted by farm advisers through field test plot activities, recommendations, and suggestions for problem solutions, and printed information and participation in educational programs. He has also helped disseminate educational and informative entomological information to a diverse clientele in agricultural and urban areas throughout the State.

I therefore commend Mr. Vernon E. Burton for his many accomplishments and a successful career, which have contributed greatly to California agriculture and to the University of California's mission for excellence in agricultural research, education, and public service.

HONOR AMERICA WEEK

HON. DOUGLAS APPLEGATE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to John Georgiafandis and the Steubenville High School Key Club for their annual sponsorship of Honor America Week. Held with the cooperation of the Steubenville City Schools, this observance is to focus on the patriotism and social activism in the Ohio Valley and the United States.

Each year the Key Club plans a week of discussion groups, seminars and displays, with the highlight being an address at the Steubenville High School's Honor America Assembly. The keynote speakers are experts in the sector of America that is the week's focus. Last year, Mary Stout, president of Vietnam Veterans of America, spoke on the MIA/POW issue, her service during the Vietnam war and the thoughts and feelings of that period in history compared to the remnants of the me generation that still pervade society today. In previous years, various military heroes, Senator JOHN GLENN and I have also spoken to the assembly.

The Key Club, through its hard work and dedication, puts together a program for the entire community, filling us all with exhiliration, national patriotism and regional pride. Rarely does a person leave the show without feeling he is glad to be an American.

Mr. Speaker, if each community in the United States honored America 1 week a year, the citizens of this country would be proud of their responsibilities in maintaining this free republic. I urge all my colleagues to join me in praising the Steubenville High School Key Club's wonderful work that makes the citizens of Steubenville more proud to be Americans each year.

INTRODUCTION OF A RESOLUTION IN OPPOSITION TO AN OIL IMPORT FEE

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, as the 101st Congress takes its sworn oath to serve the people of this great Nation, I am once again pledging to do all in my power to protect them from the unfair and regressive burden of an oil import tax. Today I am again introducing a resolution expressing the House of Representatives' opposition to the imposition of an oil import fee on any crude oil and refined petroleum products.

Oil import fees have been proposed many times over the past two decades. They are supposed to raise revenue, even-out oil price fluctuations, reduce our dependence on foreign oil, and conserve energy. Within the past few years they have had a particular appeal as a means of deficit reduction, and I am sure that proponents of an oil import fee will be mounting their high-horses again this year to sing its praises. Their song will be brief, since there is little to recommend an oil import fee for those who are concerned with fair and equitable, nonregressive revenue raising.

Since my very first speech on the floor of the House, 30 years ago, I have fought to see that an oil import fee never gains a foothold in Congress. Economists agree that lower oil prices are a tremendous benefit to our economy. A study done by a private consulting firm, Data Resources, Inc., determined that a $5 per barrel drop in oil prices translates into a 0.5 percent increase in the gross national product, lowers inflation by 1 percent, lowers unemployment by 0.4 percent, and reduces the deficit by $20 billion. Lower oil prices spur on the economy.

Recently we have been told that the American consumer can afford the fees because the price of oil has fallen over the last few years. They say that oil import fees are a painless way to bring in revenue to reduce the Federal deficit. However, macroeconomic studies indicate otherwise. Oil import fees drag the economy down.

Above all, it is important to remember that an oil import fee is in essence a tax. Whether the fee is set at $10 per barrel of imported oil, or $0.10 per barrel, it is still going to have a contractionary effect on the economy. The most immediate effect would be an increase in domestic energy costs. The price of foreign oil is a determining factor in the price of domestic oil. Should the price of foreign oil increase because of an oil import fee, domestic producers would be able to raise their prices, without having any additional production costs. The prices of other fuels, such as gas and coal, would increase as the energy market responds to higher oil prices.

That's inflationary. Higher energy costs translate into higher production costs for businesses and higher living expenses for consumers. U.S. industry, struggling to become more competitive, would be particularly ill-served by an oil import fee. Competing with foreign companies unaffected by higher production costs, U.S. businesses would suffer market share losses both domestically and internationally. The U.S. gross national product would decrease because resources, which would be used more profitably for production or investment, are diverted into energy costs and the oil industry. Unemployment in the oil industry would drop, but that drop would be more than offset by the loss of jobs in other industries.

The Department of Energy's 1987 Energy Security report concluded that a $10 per barrel oil import fee would result in a net loss to the U.S. economy of $150 to $200 billion over the next 8 years. The study also found that while a $10 per barrel import fee would collect between $17 and $32 billion per year, Federal tax revenues in other sectors would be significantly reduced. Federal spending could rise as well, because of the effect of higher energy costs on government procurement and on transfer programs tied to inflation.

Numerous other studies have concluded that an oil import fee would be harmful. But despite the preponderance of evidence against oil import fees, some advocates continue to insist that they can work. Yet even they don't deny that an oil import fee is regressive and places the greatest burden on the Northeast and Midwest.

Low-income households expend a much greater percentage of their income on energy than do moderate to high-income households. The Department of Energy's Residential Survey found that low-income households would on average have to spend 21.7 percent of their income on energy if a $10 per barrel oil import fee is enacted. This is an absolute outrage for low-income households everywhere, and it is especially outrageous in New England, where low-income households would have to spend 31.1 percent on energy. I can't conceive of a more unfair, inequitable, and unreasonable attempt to line the pockets of domestic oil producers with the hard-earned cash of families struggling to make ends meet.

The Northeast and Midwest are much more heavily dependent on imported oil for their energy needs than the rest of the country. The worst and most disproportionate effects of an oil import fee would be felt there. They would bear the burden and the costs. They would be subsidizing the rest of the Nation at the expense of their regional industry and residents. That is unwarranted and totally unnecessary. A regressive and ill-conceived tax we don't need.

There are other disadvantages associated with oil import fees that can't be easily quantified. For example, use of a fee would encourage faster depletion of U.S. oil reserves, creating a "drain America first" scenario. Over the long run we would become more, rather than less, dependent on foreign oil. And while an oil import fee might encourage the development of alternative energy sources, there are other better and more direct means to do so.

H.L. Mencken once said that for every complex problem, there is an easy solution. It is short, simple, and wrong. So it is with an oil import fee. I urge all my colleagues to join me and the original sponsors and cosponsor my resolution.

CRITICAL MINERALS MINING EXPERIMENTAL BILL

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that is aimed at reducing the frightening dependency of this Nation on imports of strategic and critical minerals from politically unstable countries. This bill is identical to H.R. 4180, which had bipartisan support in passing the House during the 100th Congress and continues to enjoy the cosponsorship of the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Mining and Natural Resources, the distinguished gentleman from Idaho, LARRY CRAIG.

I believe this legislation is extremely important to the security of the United States. It is important in this respect because it authorizes and emphasizes Bureau of Mines' research on five specific imported minerals that are bottom line essential for defense applications, not to mention their myriad uses in the industrial sectors of our economy. I think we all can agree that there are national security implications associated with the reliance on essential commodities from any politically volatile country, be it platinum from South Africa or manganese from the Soviet Union.

By way of explanation, this bill would authorize the establishment of an intensive 3-year research program aimed at reducing United States mineral import dependency on South Africa and the Soviet Union through research and improvements in extractive technologies for domestic deposits, substitute materials and recycling.

In carrying out the program, this legislation directs the Bureau of Mines to place a priority on such critical minerals as chromium, cobalt, manganese, platinum group metals [PGM], and vanadium. It is imperative that research on these minerals be accelerated in light of their uses in the basic infrastructure of our society. For example, chromium, manganese, and vanadium are all essential alloys that impart particular qualities to the stainless steel that makes up our bridges, highrise buildings and jet turbines. Cobalt, with its high strength and heat resistance, is also essential for jet turbines, while platinum group metals are the only metals that can be used in the automotive catalytic convertors that help reduce toxic emissions.

On an annual basis, the Secretary of the Interior would submit a progress report to Congress detailing results of the program. The bill would also provide $5 million for fiscal year 1990, $10 million for fiscal year 1991, and $15 million for fiscal year 1992 in budget authority for the program.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a good and worthwhile bill and I look forward to working with my colleagues toward its enactment.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM B. PHILLIPS

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise today to pay tribute to one of the truly great citizens of my 17th Congressional District of Ohio, Mr. William B. Phillips.

On Sunday, January 8, 1989, Mr. Phillips will be honored at his retirement reception at the Canfield Presbyterian Church in Canfield, OH. William Phillips is being recognized for his 31 years as the "answer man" at the Mahoning County Cooperative Extension Service, during which time he earned the respect and confidence of the people in the surrounding communities by coming to their aid with information and advice on agricultural questions.

William Phillips graduated from Ohio State University with a bachelor's degree in 1948. He then worked as a Portage County 4-H agent until 1966, when he came to the Mahoning County office as a 4-H agent and was named agricultural agent a year later. He received his master's degree from OSU in 1967 and is an associate professor in the OSU College of Agriculture. Mr. Phillips retires with the distinction of being the second most senior extension agent in Ohio with 40 years of extension service.

Mr. Phillips moved to Canfield from Youngstown 4 years ago. He has a wonderful, loving wife, Susan, and together they have two children.

I wish to congratulate William B. Phillips on his 31 exceptional years as a servant of the people of Mahoning County. I wish him well in the coming years and am honored to represent such a fine man.

REINTRODUCTION OF FLAT RATE TAX SYSTEM

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, "simplicity," "fairness," "efficiency," "promotion of economic growth." These were the rallying cries for reform of the Byzantine Tax Code. Unfortunately, Congress' response—the Tax Reform Act of 1986—failed to achieve these important goals.

I would be hard pressed to describe as "simple" or "efficient" the two volumes—totaling over 1,800 pages—of new tax legislation, the 1,379 pages of general explanation, the 503 pages of proposed technical corrections, the 296 pages of explanation of these proposed technical corrections, and the tens of thousands of pages of resulting Treasury regulations. In terms of "fairness," this was achieved for some taxpayers at the expense of others through many retroactive and hidden tax provisions. Finally, the important issue of encouraging and nurturing "economic growth" was similarly neglected. Those provisions which increase the corporate tax burden by $121 billion over 5 years, retroactively eliminate the investment tax credit, increase the tax on capital gains, and reduce the IRA and 401(k) savings incentives, will certainly have a negative impact on economic growth. While some argue that the increased economic efficiency of the lower rates will overshadow this negative impact, it is disturbing to note that the President's Council of Economic Advisors admits that the tax reform bill raises the cost of capital. Thus, only serving to highlight the disincentives for savings and investment.

Let us not surrender the tax revolt. True reform of the Tax Code is still within our grasp.

Today, I have introduced "Crane Tithe Tax Act of 1989," in order to continue the fight for true tax reform and to amend the complex and inequitable reform of the past. The bill imposes a single tax rate and can be broken down into three basic sections. These consist of: elimination of the corporate income tax, reform of the personal income tax, and tax amnesty.

The first element, elimination of the corporate income tax, recognizes the vivid economic reality that it amounts to just another cost to business. It is the same thing as the cost of labor, material, and overhead, all of which must be passed on to the consumer. The corporate income tax is one of the most indefensible forms of taxation:

Because a tax on corporate income is eventually transformed into higher prices, the tax, falls most heavily onto the lower income individuals, who spend a greater proportion of their income on consumption;

Because a tax on corporate income manifests itself in the form of reduced corporate savings and investment, the tax reduces employment due to the negative impact on economic growth;

Because a tax on corporate income is transferred into reduced wages, it becomes a hidden tax on workers;

Because a tax on corporate income is transferred in the form of reduced dividends, it falls on stockholders, the majority of which are pension plans;

Because many corporate decisions are made as a direct result of tax considerations, the corporate tax prevents true and clear motives and perpetuates corporate inefficiency.

In view of these points, it becomes clear that the corporate income tax should be eliminated. It is a hidden tax on individuals that only works to prejudice the market toward certain investments and lowers economic growth. A truly reformed Tax Code taxes individuals directly and does not interfere with the workings of the free market.

The second section of this bill concerns reforms of the personal income tax. This legislation would levy on the taxpayer a single, flat rate of 10 percent on all earned income above $10,000. All other credits, deductions, exemptions, and exclusions are eliminated. More than one point here requires clarification and discussion.

The first point of clarification is that concerning the precise definition of the term "earned income." "Earned income" in this context constitutes any and all of the following:

Wages, salaries and other forms of direct employee compensation;

The amount of the taxpayer's net earnings from self-employment for the taxable year;

The amount of dividends which are from a direct service corporation or which are otherwise direct or indirect compensation for services rendered.

The following are exceptions which are not to be termed "earned income":

Passive income, such as interest income, dividend income except as noted above, and capital gains;

Any amount received as a pension or annuity which has resulted from pre-taxed dollars;

Any tip, unless the amount of the tip is not within the discretion of the service representative.

The second point of clarification is that regarding the exemption amount. This exemption is merely a protective measure for individuals such as very low income wage-earners, who are detrimentally affected most drastically by such taxes, or adolescent workers who are trying to establish initial savings, such as educational finances. This exemption is set at $10,000 for every individual, for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988, and is fully indexed to inflation.

The final section of the bill provides a blanket amnesty from all former tax liabilities, penalties, and interests to all taxpayers not involved in criminal activity. This provision should dramatically increase the tax base by bringing the underground economy back onto the tax roles. But more importantly, it allows citizens an entirely fresh start under a new tax system.

The simplicity of this legislation is obvious. By imposing a single proportional tax on all earned income, while eliminating all shelters, credits, and deductions, any citizen can fully understand the system of taxation. It follows intuitively that taxpayers will be more likely to comply with a tax code with which they can deal knowledgeably. This bill forms the proper basis for continuing the fight for true tax reform.

MORAL RE-ARMAMENT—"BEING SOMETHING FOR GOD AND PEOPLE" CELEBRATES ITS 50TH YEAR

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, on October 29, 1988, it was my pleasure to participate in a celebration in London of the 50th anniversary of the founding of Moral Re-Armament—an important force in the spiritual life of these times. The London Times of October 31 carried the following article on the events:

MORAL RE-ARMAMENT

A service of thanksgiving and dedication was held at St. Margaret's, Westminster, on Saturday, October 29, to mark fifty years of Moral Re-Armament. The Rev. Dr. Donald Gray, Canon of Westminster and Chaplain to the Speaker of the House of Commons, officiated.

The address was given by the Right Rev. Gordon Wheeler, Roman Catholic Bishop Emeritus of Leeds. Others taking part included the Very Rev. Professor Robert Craig, a former Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, Mgr. George Leonard, of Westminster Cathedral, the Rev. Anthony Craig, Church of Scotland, Maryhill, Glasgow, and the Rev. Leslie Marsh, Methodist Superintendent, Frome. Mr. Bernard Weatherill, Speaker of the House of Commons, read a lesson.

More than 1,400 attended the service, which had to be relayed by closed-circuit television to an overflow congregation in the Central Hall, Westminster. Among them were 70 who had come especially from overseas.

Last Wednesday, October 26, Sir Bernard Braine, DL, MP, was host at a luncheon in the House of Commons for members of Parliament to meet some of the overseas visitors attending the anniversary celebrations.

The principal ceremony was in St. Margaret's Church, Westminster Abbey. St. Margaret's is where Chaucer and Pliny were baptised, Sir Walter Raleigh buried and Winston Churchill married. It is the official church of the House of Commons. The speaker of the House of Commons, Bernard Weatherill, read from Isaiah 35; and Miss Hilary Belden of the Church of England School at Twyford read from John 15; and then the Rt. Rev. William Gordon Wheeler, Roman Catholic Bishop Emeritus of Leeds, made the principal address as follows:

Both the readings for today have a very special meaning for Moral Re-Armament. In St. John's Gospel, Jesus says: "As the Father has loved Me, so I have loved you." "If you keep My commandments you will remain in My love."

And Isaiah says: "Behold, your God is coming. He is coming to save you." And this indeed happened in Christ who makes God's love manifest in its fulness. He bids us love one another as He has loved us. It is in this love we strive to bring God back into the leadership of mankind. And what does this call for? Surely a change of heart.

Now I must tell you. I was somewhat taken aback when I was asked if I would give the Address on this notable occasion. And I hope no one will walk out in the next few minutes. The explanation is this. I met Frank Buchman briefly when I was an undergraduate at Oxford in the early thirties at a gathering in the Junior Common Room of Corpus. And, God forgive me, I did not take to the man. I was already prejudiced against him. I felt he had come between me and some of my friends. I resented an American calling his movement "Oxford Group" which many confused with The Oxford Movement of the nineteenth century, in which I was personally much more interested.

Looking back, I think this must have been my loss, for when in recent years I heard of various friends of mine going to Caux [1] and telling me of the wonderful things they had witnessed there; and furthermore when in recent years I read that biography of Frank by Garth Lean, I saw him in a very different light. I am, therefore grateful to Moral Re-Armament and to Canon Gray for giving me the opportunity in old age to regret the immaturity of my thoughts and actions.

I began to see things in a different light when I read of the extraordinary achievement of post-war reconciliation brought about by his establishment and labours in the Mountain House at Caux in Switzerland. Assuredly the hand of God was there and the guidance of His Spirit clearly continues. And this was very much confirmed to me when last year I was invited to Caux, about which I had read and heard so much. It was indeed a very joyful and revealing experience.

Today's thanksgiving for fifty years of Moral Re-Armament, takes us back to East Ham Town Hall in May, 1938, as you heard this morning. At that moment when all the European nations were on the brink of war, a Swedish Socialist Harry Blomberg, spoke of the need for his country, if it was to be a reconciler of the nations, to re-arm morally. Frank, walking in the Black Forest, meditated on that phrase realising that his four Absolutes of Honesty, Purity, Selflessness and Love, could be the recipe for bringing it about. And all this was encapsulated in that great sentence of his speech: "We can, we must, and we will generate a moral and spiritual force that is powerful enough to remake the world."

"To re-make the world." That somehow from his earliest days was the mission in which he was called to participate. He knew that God alone could bring it about; but he himself and others could play their part. And this thought undoubtedly inspired him all his life. "Thy Kingdom come on earth as it is in Heaven" was the guiding prayer. Christ was his inspiration and the gospel message has always been the Christian heart of Moral Re-Armament.

Participation in the re-making of the world must always begin with a personal renewal of every individual, a turning to God, a genuine conversion, a new commitment of one's life to His service and that of all His people. That is why the four Absolutes are a sine qua non. For they, surely, and without question, must be the basis of a programme to be pursued by anyone who takes up his or her Cross to be a genuine follower of Christ.

We have heard today how Frank was always conscious, and you too are conscious, of the fact that all who would be His followers must take up a Cross to follow Him. This will surely be achieved only rarely in its fullness. But with the constant help of God it is achievable for anyone, as we know from the lives of all the Saints. It can only happen, as God wants it to happen, when we turn to Him, day after day, unflinchingly, in prayer, in Christian hope, in confidence, and with a deep humility. It calls for a daily quiet time. It calls for silence in which to hear the murmurings of the Spirit of God. It calls for a perseverance undaunted by failures. "He who perseveres to the end will be saved." There is a consolation for many of us in those words of G.K. Chesterton: "What is worth doing at all is worth doing even badly." It can be helped by the daily companionship of others who are trying to be true followers of the same Lord. We all have this effect constantly on one another, sometimes without knowing it.

This is what is meant, I think, by "an ecclesial dimension". And it is something that needs to be widened. I know from the experience of Caux, and other occasions also, the wonderful bond constituted by the love and friendship of like-minded souls in Moral Re-Armament. There has indeed been an emergence of a living network of men and women around the world who are first and foremost apostles of the Living Christ—this by God's grace will continue. Nevertheless as far as I understand it, Frank Buchman was a loyal son of the Lutheran church, though it is understandable that his specific mission did not allow him to continue his ministry in the normal sense. Doubtless he found therein an added strength as many do today in all the Christian denominations and ecclesial bodies which, after all, are the ordinary sources of the fundamentals of the faith and the practice of worship.

At the same time, Frank's apostolate, I imagine, must have been enriched by, and have enriched, some aspects of the Lutheran church. And I have a feeling that other Christian churches are enriched when dedicated members of Moral Re-Armament bring their particular insights to their own church bodies. This can be a two-way flow.

I know for example from the Catholic standpoint how essential is the strength to be true to the four Absolutes assisted by the graces of the sacramental system, which we believe Jesus founded to help us on our life's pilgrimage. Most churches today are "listening" churches and want to know all the different movements of God's graces. From this there flows also, with all our fellow members throughout the world, a common pursuit of the way of salvation through Jesus Christ our Lord and in the Holy Spirit. There is too, we thank God, in these days a specific ecumenical relationship, working for the unity of all Christians, in a spiritual dimension, stressing God's longing and His Will that we all may be one. He alone can achieve it; but He asks us to pray for it really wholeheartedly as well as to work in other ways.

Frank Buchman drew deeply on the spiritual resources of the Christian churches, Catholic and non-Catholic, with whom his work brought him in touch in different parts of the world. I remember in the thirties meeting the late Archbishop Söderblom of Uppsala. It was in Berne in Switzerland where I was privileged to go to a conference of theologians of the Eastern and Western churches. The Archbishop paid tribute to Frank's pioneer work in the ecumenical field.

I stress this because we all know that Frank's words at East Ham in 1938 made it quite clear that we must generate not only a moral force but also a spiritual force that is powerful enough to re-make the world. Commenting on this Dr. Bernard Kaelin, then the Abbot Primate of the Benedictine Order in Rome, once said this at Caux: "Moral Re-Armament can win all men because its standards are universally valid. It is not in itself a religion, nor a substitute for religion. It is not a sect. It has four mighty pillars upon which human living must be based." "Everyone," he said, "must accept these ideas if he is honest with himself."

Cardinal König, who is happily with us today, emphasised this when he spoke at Caux in 1986. He was speaking à propos East-West tensions and the need for dialogue: "I believe that a discovery which Frank Buchman made in this area will prove to be correct, that people in the East as well as the West need the courage to look deep inside themselves and to discover the conscience that our Creator has implanted in every one of us; in other words the source of spirit and truth."

To me, this thinking is of great importance for now and for the future. For all men and women are made in the image of God. There is a divine spark in all of us—sometimes it is jolly hard to find, but it's there because God Himself made it so—a divine mechanism if you like, which has moved many dear friends of ours, men and women of many faiths, some of them here today, who want to help bring God's Kingdom on earth. We have met them in different parts of the world. We have met them in Caux. We have met them here today. Indeed this commitment to God's Kingdom, to a world re-made, is one that is total in concept. And we are enriched by their presence. We must only hope that they, too, are enriched by our Christian presence and perhaps perceive something of the sublime mysteries of Incarnation and Redemption which bring new promise to the Coming of God's Kingdom. It is said that the world today does not condemn us for being Christians but for not being Christian enough.

So we come back to those "four mighty pillars" which are more than ever needed in the world today than they were on the eve of the Second World War. We are reminded of that in the Programme of this Golden Jubilee where it says: "In an age of materialism and busyness it encourages people to make available the time and space for silence without which spiritual growth, perception and direction quickly wither. In an age of individualism it forges a global network of men and women from many traditions, working together towards a common goal to build a world where every human need is met."

I hope it does not seem presumptuous for me to say that I see a wonderful enrichment of the original movement itself after these fifty years. Over more than fifty years I imagine Frank himself must have realised that it has grown and it has mellowed perhaps, become more extrovert. And when I think of the incredible achievement of an international bond of reconciliation and love, caring and compassion, self-denial and dedication, the striving for justice and peace, the facing of the problems of the Third World, I find it easy today to make Thanksgiving for the life of Frank Buchman. By his intense occupation with individuals and his charisma for drawing them to God, he stressed the fundamental importance of the individual spiritual growth necessary for the promotion of God's way for all the world.

When I read of the enormous number of people of all types, all nations, and all strata of society, who came his way or sought him out and whose lives were changed by the contact, I realise that here was truly a man of God. He seems to have thought of himself just as a signpost: but others thought of him as something more.

He pursued relentlessly the way of dialogue and took on board of his movement a wide range of expertise in innumerable spheres. And I am sure that in his latter days he had the humility to feel that he himself must decrease so that God's will through Christ would increase through others. And that means all of you.

So what about the future? Here indeed is the challenge. It will assuredly be "Faith filled and Spirit led." And so we call on God the Holy Spirit "to renew the face of the earth." Many surprising things of great promise are happening in the world today as we approach the third millennium. By God's grace we shall continue to play some part in the healing of conflicts on all levels. There are many outstanding followers of the Moral Re-Armament movement who, I believe, will play a great part in the economic and social side of humanity's development. This is happening now and will doubtless continue. May the numbers of these dedicated men and women increase. The idea put forward of a world plan in this respect could be a way of advance. One thing is certain—we will have a part to play in being something for God and all His people.

Surely we need to do something special for our poor Western World (naturally rich, spiritually deprived) which has drifted so far from its Christian origins. There is a general feeling today in the Christian churches that a complete re-evangelisation has become necessary. You may remember when Harold Macmillan was asked what he considered the cause of the decline in our country from the moral standpoint, he said, "It began when we ceased to be a churchgoing people."

The Christian reclaiming of the Western World, as you well know, is something specially dear to the mind and heart of Pope John Paul II, who by his great spiritual and pastoral example proclaims so tirelessly the message of Christ in all its entirety. It is thought that the task is so vast that it needs the fullest co-operation of all committed Christians and others by their prayer and activity; and that such ecumenical evangelism could lead us closer to Christian unity which today seems in some ways so remote.

In this regard, Moral Re-Armament, enriched by the wisdom of its fifty years, may surely be pointing the way. For the simple message of the four Absolutes, Honesty, Purity, Selflessness, Love, those four "mighty pillars", presented as always in the light of Christ, can provide us with a common front already tried. And can it not lead us to an even greater unity in striving together to help "re-make the world"?

This is the message I would want to give: "Love one another as I have loved you."

Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were a present far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all.

God bless you all.

SERVING THOSE WHO SERVED

HON. G.V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, although the plight of homeless persons is something that requires our continuing attention, occasionally we hear stories that some of our efforts to assist them are bearing fruit. In April 1987, we adopted a supplemental appropriation to fund programs for the homeless. Included in that bill was an amendment I offered to allocate $15 million to expand the VA's domiciliary program in order to increase its capacity to treat homeless veterans. The program was launched a little over a year ago, and there are now 10 Veterans' Administration medical centers which have established new domiciliary programs.

Recently, Mr. Jeff Gammage of the Philadelphia Inquirer visited the Coatesville VA Medical Center west of Philadelphia and reported on how its program is working. His report is encouraging and I want to applaud the VA employees who have helped to make this particular program successful. So that other Members can learn more about this program, Mr. Gammage's article follows.

IT'S SHELTER AND MORE FOR HOMELESS VETERANS

(By Jeff Gammage)

Eugene Weaver's Air Force career took him all over the world, to secret military bases in Turkey, along the Great Wall of China, through the streets of the Kremlin.

After leaving the military, he held good jobs at several industries in the Philadelphia and Camden area, earning salaries that topped $35,000. But then he got sick, developing cancer and gangrene. A lengthy hospitalization cost him his job and eventually his home. By the time he was well enough to leave the hospital, he had nowhere to go.

Weaver, 56, a proud man who once held the temporary rank of colonel, ended up at the homeless shelter at the Coatesville Veterans' Administration Hospital.

He is among the luckier ones.

For the Coatesville hospital gave Weaver food, shelter and medical treatment. It is one of only 27 hospitals nationally that provide care for homeless veterans. Nationwide, there are only 7,500 beds for as many as 1 million homeless vets.

The Coatesville program was established in October 1987, after Congress appropriated $15 million to create 525 new beds for the homeless at 10 VA hospitals. The centers joined 17 existing shelters across the country.

The goal is to make good use of underused hospital space, space that the Coatesville hospital had available.

"It's hard to accept something like this, because I love to work," said Weaver, who since being interviewed at Coatesville has been moved to a long-term care center in Martinsburg, W. Va. "But I couldn't ask for better treatment."

The VA's domiciliary program—as it is called—is believed to be among the few instances of direct, federally operated shelters for the homeless.

To qualify, a veteran must be homeless, have an income of less than $823 a month and have a medical, psychiatric or drug abuse problem. Veterans come in themselves, or are brought in by counselors who roam the streets of Philadelphia, Newark and Wilmington.

"You ask why they're homeless," said VA spokesman Bonner Day. "The answer is really each of these individuals has an individual story to tell."

For some, homelessness is directly related to their military service. Others left the service and successfully held other jobs before they came to the VA.

Some veterans have spent years trekking from shelter to shelter, unable to understand or accept the wars they helped fight, according to VA officials. Some left conventional society to live like frontiersmen in the woods. Coatesville officials tell of one veteran who lived at a construction site, arriving after the crews left work and leaving each day before they arrived.

Another man held a decent Navy shipyard job but got heavily into cocaine. Eventually his wife took their two kids and left, and the bank foreclosed on his home.

About 80 percent of those who come into VA shelters have been addicted to alcohol or drugs, often to dull the pain of combat memories. And some simply got sick and couldn't meet their mortgage payments.

At the Coatesville hospital, veterans undergo intensive rehabilitation designed to return them to society within 90 days. Some veterans, ill or disabled, may be sent to other, long-term domiciliaries, where they spend years of even the rest of their lives.

In the Coatesville unit, the first weeks are spent testing skills and abilities, the next weeks finding a job, and the last making enough money for independent living. In some special cases, the 90-day limit is extended for months.

The shelter's 40 beds are full; if the beds turned over every three months, the center could help only 160 veterans a year. The waiting list is long.

"The homeless program was intended to get veterans off the street who need food, lodging and medical care," said Richard Rothan, chief of domiciliary operations at the Coatesville VA. "That's a fraction of the problem. . . . If I had double the capacity tomorrow, I could fill it."

The plan, on paper at least, is to expand to 200 beds within five years. In the meantime, the Coatesville hospital does what it can.

The domiciliary unit looks nothing like the stereotype of a homeless shelter. There are no rows of fold-up cots, no bedraggled men in dirty clothes. Instead, the unit resembles a college dormitory, with rows of doors lining a long hallway.

The unit was renovated only weeks ago; the walls still smell of fresh paint.

The veterans live in neat clean rooms under a strict set of house rules: Curfew is 11 p.m., no alcohol or drugs are allowed on the premises. Patients must submit to staff-ordered urine tests and breath analyzers. Those required to stay sober as part of their treatment can be discharged for a positive reading.

No abusive language toward the staff or other patients is tolerated. Weekend passes, to reconcile with spouses or find a new home with other family members, are encouraged, and even two- or three-week passes can be arranged in some cases.

A patient-advisory council provides a forum for patients and staff to resolve disagreements, and also gives patients a voice in setting the rules of the domiciliary.

During their time there, veterans can learn skills in such fields as graphic arts, electronics, metal work, upholstery and furniture-making.

"We pay them to learn, because the furniture itself is of value, and it's used in the hospital," said Ralph Buckles, chief of vocational-rehabilitation therapy. "They go out with a skill. . . . We want them to feel good about what they're doing, to feel they've accomplished something."

It's not easy to get a job when your phone number is a pay phone and your address is the VA hospital. But once veterans do find work—about a third are holding outside jobs at any given time—they are encouraged to save 70 percent of their salary toward future rent.

Half the 40 beds belong to Vietnam era veterans, although national most beds in the domiciliary program are held by veterans of World War II, according to VA.

Rothan believes the VA shelters soon may become the last refuge for another type of veteran: Those suffering from the deadly disease AIDS.

Because of the lack of AIDS shelters and hospices, he expects that more veterans who are victims of AIDS will need the shelters.

"I think the homeless domiciliary is where he's going to be ending up" Rothan said.

Care for homeless veterans actually began long before the world wars, going back to 1865 when President Abraham Lincoln signed a law creating veterans' rest homes, according to VA officials. That makes domiciliary care—albeit in a form far different from today—one of the oldest veterans programs in the nation.

Today, the VA's 27 hospital shelters provide care to about 16,000 veterans. Most shelters operate at capacity. The VA eventually expects to realign them geographically, changing from a few large shelters in rural areas to numerous smaller homes closer to cities and the supply of jobs, housing and transportation.

"We've got a saying: 'It ain't no old soldiers' home anymore,' " said Richard Olson, the VA's Washington-based chief of domiciliary programs. "The whole object here is to restore the vet to active community living."

He estimates that homeless veterans who get jobs and become taxpayers will repay the cost of their care within two years.

Yet the VA isn't sure how many homeless vets are out there. Estimates of the number of homeless veterans range from 47,500 to 1 million, Olson said. The VA said it's difficult to determine a reliable figure because people may be homeless one month but not the next and because the homeless move from place to place.

"We've found for most vets, most of the readjustment problems, drinking, fighting with the family, are controlled or eliminated entirely when the vet gets a job," VA spokesman Day said. "If you have a job, it takes your entire day to get ready, to go to it, to function and to come home. If you don't have one, you have that entire day to brood. You served your country, maybe overseas, and yet this giant economy can't provide you with a job."

Edward Talley had a job. But the 45-year-old Air Force veteran lost his job and his home after suffering severe injuries in a 1986 auto accident.

"The money ran out, and I ended up here," he said, sitting in a meeting room at the Coatesville shelter. "I came here with the clothes on my back.'

The Boothwyn native, who served in the Air Force from 1963-67, has spent more than nine months at the shelter. He planned to leave much earlier, but health problems kept him there undergoing treatment. He sees the shelter as a blessing.

"They can holler about the VA system all they want to, but the VA saved my life," he said. "They put a roof over my head."

SAN FRANCISCO HIT BY BASE CLOSING COMMISSION REPORT

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, the much-heralded savings that were to be accomplished by the Commission on Base Realignment and Closure only amounts to a meager fraction of the total $300 billion Defense budget. San Francisco would be one of the hardest hit communities in the closure plan.

Of the savings outlined by the Commission, the two military installations targeted for closure in San Francisco amount to 12 percent of the total. Our city is bearing a disproportionate burden for the sake of a very small savings.

The Commission's recommendation to relocate the U.S.S. Missouri runs counter to the economic arguments the Navy has made relative to San Francisco's strategic importance for homeporting. The President's budget should shed more light on that discussion when it is presented to Congress on January 9.

Closing the Presidio is not a deficit-reducing step. The Defense Department still has the discretion to transfer this savings to other defense programs. Congressman PHILLIP BURTON, in his wisdom, passed a law requiring Presidio lands, no longer essential to the 6th Army, to be transferred to the GGNRA. The cost of maintaining the Presidio is simply shifted to the Park Service.

If the Commission report prevails,

We must insist that proper environmental safeguards are provided by the Department of Defense to protect the environment and the community.

We must insist that the Department of Defense immediately address the impact of job loss for 3,200 civilian workers and their families at the Presidio.

We must insist on appropriate action to compensate communities for their economic losses, commensurate with the degree to which they are affected.

It is ironic that our first step to reduce defense spending in the 101st Congress creates so much human suffering with so little savings to the Federal Government. Unless the Department of Defense stands prepared to guarantee that the environmental, personal and economic toll will be mitigated, I will oppose adoption of the report.

I believe the Commission's recommendation to close the Presidio offers no savings to the Federal Government. Congress must judge if an overall reduction of less than one-fourth of 1 percent meets its goals to accomplish the savings intended by this legislation. I, for one, will request that Secretary Carlucci make available to us all the information on which this decision was based.

I look forward to working with Congresswoman BARBARA BOXER, Mayor Agnos, and the San Francisco community to insure that the history and beauty of the Presidio are preserved for future generations.

Included below is an article written by the commander of the Presidio, Col. Joe Rafferty. It offers his analysis of how the Presidio affects the bay area.

[From the San Francisco Progress, June 29, 1988]

THE IMPACT OF THE PRESIDIO

(By Col. Joe Rafferty)

The purpose of this article is to focus on the Presidio of San Francisco and the U.S. Army's impact on the Bay Area as a valued resource, militarily, economically, and culturally.

Many soldiers consider duty at the Presidio to be one of the choice assignments in the Army because it presents a rare opportunity to share in the history of one of the nation's most beautiful posts.

Ironically, the same assignment often results in severe hardship for soldiers and their families, particularly those lower ranking who are waiting for or unable to qualify for on-post housing. For these soldiers, what should be a pleasant and professionally rewarding experience turns into a financial nightmare which taxes the imagination of the Army and its relief agencies. Working to better the "quality of life" for our personnel continues to be a major challenge that faces every commander at the Presidio.

The Presidio of San Francisco is a special installation and, indeed, a special "neighborhood" in San Francisco, being among the oldest continually active military posts in the United States.

The first "presidio," a small fort founded in 1776 by Spanish conquistadores, predates our nation's Declaration of Independence. Parts of the original structure are still present within our current Officers' Club. Therein lie remnants of an adobe wall of the oldest building in San Francisco, the "commandancia," or headquarters of the first Presidio commander.

The post crest incorporates the shields of the Royal Houses of Spain in recognition of these historical origins. This distinctive crest can be seen throughout the post and even on the seventeenth century cannons which were brought to California by the Spanish and now grace the entrance to the Officers' Club.

American troops first raised the Stars and Stripes over the Presidio in 1847, and the United States Army has been present in San Francisco ever since. The Presidio's strategic importance was evident to early Spanish and Mexican authorities, and for the same reasons it continues as a linchpin of our Army's defense of the Western United States. As our nation grew and its interests expanded, the Presidio also grew in both size and its role. Although the garrison has always been prepared for war, no gun at the Presidio has ever been fired in anger during the post's 212 years.

The Presidio has grown with, and aided when needed, our neighbor, the City of San Francisco. We have witnessed and shared great events of the past: times of trouble and turmoil, times of building and rebuilding, and times of celebration. Through good times and bad, the Presidio and the Army were steadfastly there.

The Presidio was designated as a national historic landmark in 1960, and with this in mind, steps are being taken to ensure the retention and preservation of the historic buildings, monuments, and related land areas in the Presidio.

Many San Franciscans may not realize that the Presidio was once an uncomfortable and inhospitable place to be assigned. A century ago the Army began the process of planting thousands of trees to retain the soil, buffer the incessant winds, and convert the post to a place of beauty and stability. Today, the Presidio is, in a sense, a garden spot for the Bay Area with nearly 90 percent of its acreage classified as green area and possessing more than 75 miles of marked trails. These areas are enjoyed by hundreds of thousands of visitors yearly. The Presidio is an "open post" and visitors are welcomed and encouraged to share its scenic beauty.

In particular, San Francisco and Army history are highlighted in many interesting exhibits at the Presidio Army Museum. The museum is open to the public every day but Monday and is free of charge.

As has been the case throughout much of its history, the Presidio is a headquarters for many Army activities affecting the Western United States. In addition to commanding several units assigned directly to the Presidio, the installation provides logistical and administrative support to Active Army, Army Reserve, and National Guard units in 12 western continental states, plus Alaska. This equates to 330,000 military and civilian personnel.

The Presidio is also home to 32 tenant units, including the Headquarters of the Sixth United States Army and Letterman Army Medical Center. A major mission of the Army at the Presidio is to provide support to civil authorities in the event of natural disaster. The Sixth U.S. Army is the coordinating agency for the Department of Defense for disaster relief operations. This mission requires a close working relationship with the City government, especially in the area of earthquake preparedness. Soldiers from the Presidio helped to bring order out of the chaos of the great earthquake of 1906 and are prepared to assist again as may be required.

Although smaller in acreage than just a generation ago, the Presidio's economic impact on the San Francisco Bay Area grows. The installation's financial operations pay some 75,000 Active Army, Army Reserve and National Guard personnel. The Presidio has approximately 2,800 soldiers assigned to units on the post, as well as more than 3,200 civilian employees. This work force of over 6,000 people makes the Presidio one of the top five employers in the Bay Area.

In fiscal year 1986, the total disbursements from the Presidio reached $777 million. That figure grew in 1987 to $806 million. Most of those dollars stayed in the Bay Area. For example, during 1986, $604 million was dispersed in salaries and services. In 1987, this amount increased to $666 million. This two-thirds of a billion dollars annual expenditure clearly demonstrates the Presidio's economic importance to San Francisco and its surrounding communities.

Additionally, Army family members add over 10,000 to the Bay Area population. More than 600 children from the Presidio attend San Francisco public schools, bringing more than $1.8 million to the public school system in federal funding.

Presidio achievements in equal opportunity programs have gained recognition as the top minority and handicapped employer in the area. The Presidio currently employs over 400 workers with reportable disabilities and has received commendations from the Governor, Mayor of San Francisco, and the California congressional delegation in Washington for its leadership role as an employer of the handicapped.

Many San Franciscans will recall that during the late 1970s the Presidio was threatened with closure. The City and citizens of San Francisco rallied in support. The Presidio's importance to the Bay Area, and to the overall defense of the nation, was emphatically shown to Congress and Federal authorities, and the closure was averted. The debate did place many plans to upgrade the installation on hold and it has taken years to recover from that lack of progress.

During the past several years, construction plans were approved to provide safe and essential facilities to our soldiers, replacing deteriorating and outdated buildings. New facilities will include: much needed barracks for our troops; a new commissary where soldiers can purchase food at reduced rates; a new child care center; an expanded shopping complex, and other service-oriented facilities which will enhance the quality of life of soldiers and their families. A number of these projects are funded and should be completed within the next several years.

The Presidio's working relationship with our closest neighbor, the Golden Gate National Recreation Area—which was created from excess Army property in 1972—and the City and County of San Francisco, are excellent.

In conclusion, The Presidio of San Francisco is important to the Army as an urban military installation; but it is an equally valuable Bay Area resource. It continually grows as an economic and cultural factor in Bay Area life. It enables the public, especially during peace time, to learn more about the defense requirements of their country. They have the unique opportunity to hear a bugle blow reveille or occasionally participate in a military ceremony.

The Presidio and its people act as a reminder that the freedoms Americans enjoy have been attained by past sacrifices and can be preserved only by adequate military readiness. It should be reassuring for citizens to know that the Presidio, and the various commands located there, are prepared to lend as much assistance as possible in the event of a natural disaster.

It is my strong conviction that the United States Army has been a good steward for the Presidio of San Francisco, and its record in historic and environmental preservation speaks for itself. The post's appeal and the attractiveness of the Golden Gate National Recreation Area draw hundreds of thousands of visitors annually.

The Army extends a warm invitation to all Bay Area residents, visitors and tourists, to visit the Presidio soon, starting with a trip to our museum on Lincoln Boulevard to learn the interesting history of the post and receive a first-hand look at today's dedicated soldiers who are doing their share in our nation's defense.

LEGISLATION TO PROMOTE THE DELIVERY OF WATER AND SEWAGE SERVICE

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform the House of Representatives that I have reintroduced legislation that will promote the delivery of water and sewage service, as well as other human needs, to the residents of rural areas. I originally introduced this legislation at the end of the 100th Congress, but our busy agenda prior to adjournment precluded the opportunity to conduct hearings on this issue. I hope we will be able to fully investigate this legislation during the 101st Congress, and encourage my colleagues to support this effort.

My legislation would enable municipalities to annex rural areas which develop on the outskirts of many cities. As the U.S. Representative for south Texas, many rural subdivisions, commonly referred to as colonias, are in my congressional district. Since these developments are not located within the limits of any municipality, these neighborhoods do not have access to clean water and sewage service, police, fire, garbage collection, and other services which are typically provided by a city government. Delivery of these services is also constrained because county governments are restricted by State law in Texas from assuming debt to provide these certain services. Similar limitations upon county governments in other States may result in the same roadblocks.

To fulfill these unmet needs in rural areas, water supply corporations and other quasi-public entities have formed to provide clean water to rural residents. These entities assume many different agendas and structures, and obtain financing from a variety of State and Federal agencies. In most cases, however, their seed money originates with a combination of grants and loans from the Farmers Home Administration [FmHA]. Once water service is provided by the water supply corporation, a monthly fee must be determined which is affordable for the residents. This fee represents the source of capital that water supply corporations utilize to repay their loans from Federal agencies.

At some point in the development of these rural subdivisions, an adjacent municipality may desire to annex the newly developed areas. Cities often feel an obligation to service nearby areas, and annexation offers a city the opportunity to increase its registered population and tax base. In addition, cities are often interested in extending their jurisdiction over issues related to zoning and land use. While a city obtains these benefits through annexation, they also assume responsibility for expanding water and sewage pipes, and the enforcement of building codes in the rural areas. In addition, a city must provide police, fire, and garbage service to their new citizens.

I am a strong supporter of bringing various levels of government together to address the significant needs in colonies and other rural areas nationally. In this regard, I welcome the interest expressed by cities in annexing adjacent rural areas. But removing those customers from the service area of existing water supply corporations may threaten the repayment schedules for Federal loans extended to the water supply corporations. The Federal Government, through Federal agencies such as the FmHA, have a direct investment in the rural water authorities. They are therefore understandably wary when a debtor loses a portion of the population base needed to service an existing Federal loan.

This issue was recently addressed in a U.S. Circuit Court decision on May 15, 1987, in Mississippi. The court ruled that existing Federal law prohibits municipalities from encroaching on or competing with areas that currently are served by a water supply corporation that is indebted to the FmHA.

I certainly understand the court's ruling in this decision, and empathize with the court's fear that municipalities may attempt to annex the most populous and profitable areas, only leaving distant subdivisions on the outskirts of a water supply corporation's service area. This development could seriously impair service to the remaining customers, and threaten the Federal agencies ability to collect their loan.

With these various concerns in mind, I have worked with interested parties to develop a legislative initiative which enables municipalities to annex areas, without threatening existing service or a water supply corporation's ability to repay a Federal loan. This legislation, which I am introducing today, contains provisions that ensure the municipality provides fair compensation to the currently operating water supply corporation. This compensation must take into account the terms of any loan currently extended to that water supply corporation, and their ability to repay that loan. It must also take into account how a partial annexation of the service area would impact the remaining customers, as well as estimated population changes in the general service area.

I feel this bill is consistent with last year's court ruling, and includes the necessary safeguards to protect any Federal investment and loans to water supply entities. In addition, it provides municipalities with the flexibility to annex rapidly developing areas and encourage economic development. While this legislation necessarily focuses upon the economic impact caused by such an annexation, the purpose is to expedite the extension and delivery of water and sewage services to people in rural areas. Public and private entities at all levels must contribute to this effort, and passage of this bill will encourage the partnerships which are necessary to bring clean water and sewage treatment to all the citizens of our country.

As I stated earlier, I believe it will take the combined and resolute efforts of public and private officials at the local, State and Federal levels to appropriately address the problems related to unrestricted rural development. I am encouraged by reports that legislation will be introduced in the State of Texas Legislature to create a $500 million bond program to address the unmet needs in colonias along the United States-Mexican border. I will be working during the 101st Congress to pursue Federal initiatives which respond to the needs in rural areas. I look forward to attacking these concerns with my colleagues who have similar problems in their congressional districts, and also will all Members who are shocked by the substandard conditions in which many Americans must live.

I encourage my colleagues in the 101st Congress to support the legislation that I am introducing today. If enacted, it will protect the Federal Government's investment in water supply and utility districts, while encouraging municipalities to extend their services to areas with unlimited potential. Greater investment in these areas is required before the residents can attain their capacity for physical and mental achievement. Let us provide governments with the freedom and means of making additional investment.

HONORING THE YOLO COUNTY FARM BUREAU ON ITS 75TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding organization that has served Yolo County agriculture in the highest capacity for 75 years. The Yolo County Farm Bureau is a voluntary, nongovernmental, bipartisan organization of farmers, designed to accomplish cooperatively that which they cannot do alone. The farm bureau helps farmers help themselves.

Yolo County farmers and their families formed the first farm bureau in the Sacramento Valley on March 7, 1914, to take advantage of the new Agricultural Extension Service that was established by the University of California in July 1913. The Yolo County Farm Bureau was the third farm bureau in the State, organized to help farmers work with the new extension farm advisers. The group of forward-thinking Yoloans subscribed to the basic vision of the new extension program—that practical education for the people can lead to a better society for all.

Passage of the Smith-Hughes Act on May 8, 1914, implemented a national extension program in each of 2,920 counties, involving the U.S. Department of Agriculture working through the agricultural experiment stations of land grant colleges and universities. The purpose of this landmark legislation was to aid in diffusing among the people useful and practical information relating to agriculture and home economics and to encourage its application.

Yolo County residents were eager to help promote this new partnership of Federal, State, and local funding, which was designed to bring the benefits of university agricultural research directly to farmers, and to improve the quality of life for those living in rural communities. Early cooperative farm bureau efforts involved improved agricultural practices, a better road system, rural fire protection, community improvement projects, and sponsorship of youth programs.

Then, as now, farm bureau members work directly with the University of California's county farm adviser to solve problems and improve agricultural production. The farm bureau also works closely with the county agricultural commissioner who enforces State-mandated regulations, and with the Yolo County Board of Supervisors to promote Yolo County's agricultural economy.

Through the years, members of the Yolo County Farm Bureau have exerted leadership roles at the county, State, and national farm bureau levels. The Yolo County Farm Bureau continues to win statewide recognition for its overall program, most recently garnering five outstanding achievement plaques at the State farm bureau's 1988 convention. Meanwhile, membership in the Yolo County Farm Bureau has blossomed over the years—from 67 at its initial meeting in 1914, to 2,119 in 1989.

The farm bureau plays a vital role in shaping Yolo County's future, working for the betterment of the quality of life for all its citizens. I salute the Yolo County Farm Bureau on its 75th anniversary and commend the organization for its exemplary service to agriculture and the people of Yolo County.

FIRST UNITED METHODIST CELEBRATES SESQUICENTENNIAL

HON. DOUGLAS APPLEGATE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to honor the First United Methodist Church of Bellaire, OH, during the congregation's sesquicentennial celebration. As well as commemorating the 150th year after its formation, First United Methodist is also celebrating the 100th anniversary of its present building.

In light of the growing importance of enduring peace and the dignity of the human spirit, today's religious institutions are more important than ever. The churches also play an important part here in the United States as they provide comfort, compassion and moral guidance to people across the Nation. I commend the First United Methodist Church for its past and continued participation in these processes.

Through the years this church and the members have enriched and inspired the city of Bellaire and the surrounding communities. In fact, the church is older than the city itself; and both of their histories are closely interwoven.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me in congratulating the First United Methodist Church on this most important milestone. Even as patriotism grows in our country we must not lose sight that we are "One Nation under God."

A BILL TO DENY FEDERAL CONTRACTS TO CONSISTENT LABOR LAW VIOLATORS

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, as I did in the 100th Congress, I am introducing legislation to generally prohibit the awarding of Federal contracts to consistent, willful labor law violators. This legislation will ensure that we do not reward those companies which have consistently violated the law with any Federal contracts.

Under my bill, the National Labor Relations Board would be authorized to identify and provide to the Secretary of Labor the name of any person who is in willful violation of the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act. The Secretary of Labor would then certify the identification of the person involved and forward the name of the person to the Comptroller General, who would notify each Federal agency and department of the Secretary's certification. Any person so named could not receive any Federal contracts for up to 3 years.

Twenty-two years ago, similar legislation was first introduced. The report on that bill by the House Special Committee on Labor suggested that Federal contracts be denied to repeated violators of the National Labor Relations Act. In the 94th Congress similar legislation was again introduced, and in 1977 President Carter sent a package of reform measures to Congress which included a debarment provision for labor law violators. In the 95th Congress, the House passed a labor reform bill which strengthened NLRB remedies against repeated violators of the National Labor Relations Act.

Several States had laws with similar provisions until the Supreme Court ruled in 1986 in Wisconsin versus Gould that it is the responsibility of the Federal Government—not the States—to enforce Federal labor law. Thus, the need for my legislation is more compelling given the Supreme Court's decision.

Under my bill, the Secretary of Labor may remove or reduce the contract restrictions imposed against a company or union, if there is no other source for the materials or services, or if the national interest so requires. The debarment period is a maximum of 3 years, and can only occur after a pattern of willful violations has been identified by the Secretary of Labor. Existing contracts will not be canceled. All a company or union needs to do to avoid debarment is obey the law.

There should be no financial incentive for those who break the law. We do not want our tax dollars spent on contracts with businesses which fail to uphold our labor laws. The legislation is fair and balanced, and is important for the integrity of the Federal contracting process, and for those who benefit from it. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor the bill, and I urge prompt action by the Education and Labor Committee.

IMPORTED COAL HINDERS U.S. ENERGY SECURITY

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, recently it was announced that Venezuelan coal will be delivered to distribution facilities in Camden, NJ, for use by utility and industrial customers. This announcement follows on the heels of the delivery of about 100,000 tons of Colombian coal to Camden during 1988.

These deliveries of foreign coal illustrate the growing threat imports pose to segments of the domestic coal industry and coalfield employment primarily from mines in Colombia and Venezuela which were built with the assistance of United States corporations.

Frankly, as a native of the rich coalfields of southern West Virginia, I never thought that I would live to see the day when the United States would begin to walk down the path of foreign coal dependency.

These coal imports represent a tumor on the energy security of this Nation. This tumor can only be diagnosed as being malignant; growing and spreading throughout the electric utility markets of the gulf and Southeastern States with foreign coal even penetrating the Northeastern region as well.

Today, I am once again introducing two measures aimed at addressing the inequities that exist which I believe are partly responsible for making foreign coal so attractive to certain domestic buyers.

The first measure would simply impose an $8 per ton duty on imported coal. No tariff is currently collected on these imports. The purpose of the duty is to offset the competitive advantage foreign producers have as a result of not having to meet environmental, health, welfare and safety requirements of the kind imposed on U.S. coal producers.

The second measure seeks to address one of the factors which have been an essential element in the establishment of new mining operations in both Colombia and Venezuela: the financial and technical expertise of United States mining entities. In this regard, the legislation would prohibit the issuance of new Federal coal leases to any entity which is involved in the production and importation into the United States of foreign coal. From a public policy standpoint, I see no reason why the people of this country should award these companies with public coal resources when these very same entities are responsible for robbing other producers, such as those in my State of West Virginia, of market opportunities.

TRIBUTE TO THE HOME SAVINGS & LOAN CO. OF YOUNGSTOWN

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in order to pay tribute to one of the finest institutions in my 17th Congressional District of Ohio, the Home Savings & Loan Co. of Youngstown.

This outstanding institution will celebrate its 100th anniversary on January 15, 1989, and will hold a luncheon to mark the occasion on January 12, 1989, at the Wick-Pollock Inn in Youngstown.

The Home Savings & Loan of Youngstown has served the needs of the Youngstown area and the surrounding communities faithfully for 100 years largely through the efforts of the McKay family. James M. McKay was instrumental in founding the institution and was its president from 1921 until 1944, when his son, J. Russell McKay, became its president and served until 1966. Donald B. McKay, the grandson of James, continues the family tradition of serving as the head of Home Savings & Loan by serving as the company's president from 1966 to the present.

Mr. Speaker, it fills me with a great sense of pride to represent the people of Home Savings & Loan of Youngstown. I want to extend to them my most sincere wishes for a bright future and continued dedicated service to the people of the Mahoning Valley.

TIPS AND TAXES

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, today I reintroduced legislation addressing the horrendous administrative mess caused by the present taxation of tips. The treatment of tips under our Federal income tax is a source of agony for both taxpayers and tax collectors. Although a tip is a voluntary and gratuitous gift, current law requires it to be reported as part of the gross income of the recipient.

Most of us realize that the tax on tips is administratively impossible to proctor and collect. A congressional mandate was made which could not be fulfilled, rendering the law an hypocrisy. Because compliance cost is economically prohibitive, the law-abiding employer cannot be effectively law abiding. This paradox forces honest men and women outside of the law, while simultaneously decreasing the credibility and force of the law. The result has been a broadening of the noncriminal underground economy, estimated to be as great as $500 billion in 1984. Enactment of this bill would account for a significant portion of the underground economy, relieving the Government's frustration over tax avoidance.

Tip income should not be considered equal to a salary earned income. Salary income is secure, consistent, and contractually guaranteed. Tips are voluntary, gratuitous, and subject to the sole discretion of the customer. Those employees receiving them lack certainty and security in their takehome pay which fluctuates on a daily basis. Providing them with a tax benefit compensates for this insecurity, so as to equalize their position with the secure wage earner. Removing tips from gross income is another prolabor proposal targeted at the little guy. Cab drivers, bartenders, bellhops, waitresses, porters, and others collecting tips would have a tax free cash available for savings and investment. While workers who fail to report their tip income are forced to spend income, tax free tips would allow workers to save and invest this money without fear of Internal Revenue Service investigations.

In addition, this legislation would provide greater efficiency to the Tax Code. The service industry as a whole would improve if tips were given tax free status. Tax free tips would provide an important incentive to workers and would enhance the quality of work in the service industry. The minimum wage laws would be unaffected by this bill, and employers would still be in compliance with the law.

Excluding tips from gross income would simplify the Tax Code during a period when the public is still wondering where to find the simplicity which is claimed to exist somewhere in the voluminous Tax Reform Act of 1986. This bill would eliminate much of the compliance and administrative difficulties, ease the frustrations over the growing underground economy, promote tax equity, and provide important tax benefits to the foundation of our labor class. I urge Members to consider the public's call for tax simplification, tax fairness, and tax efficiency, and support this bill.

RESOLUTION TO SAVE THE ESSENTIAL AIR SERVICE PROGRAM

HON. JOHN P. HAMMERSCHMIDT

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I introduced a resolution to strongly urge the Department of Transportation [DOT] not to implement the cuts in the Essential Air Service [EAS] Program that it proposed in notice 88–18.

Second, 1 year ago, Congress reauthorized and revised the EAS Program. The purpose of this reauthorization was to ensure continued air service to the small communities and rural areas of this Nation and to correct existing deficiencies in the program that had caused service and passenger usage to deteriorate at some communities. I continue to believe that this revised EAS Program, if fully and faithfully implemented, will be beneficial to small communities and the national air transportation system.

Third, therefore, I was very disappointed to see the recent DOT proposal that would eliminate air service at some 30 to 50 communities. It would have been better if that department had spent the time issuing the necessary rules and procedures to implement the new EAS Program rather than developing options for cutting the old one.

Of course, I recognize that the current fiscal year 1989 appropriation for EAS is below the level needed to sustain current service levels. But this is nothing new.

Fourth, in the past, when the Civil Aeronautics Board [CAB] was responsible for the program, the initial appropriation was often insufficient to carry the program through the entire fiscal year. However, in each case, Congress eventually came through with a supplemental appropriation. This year should be no different. Indeed, there is some indication that the low EAS appropriation was due to a misunderstanding about the amount actually needed to maintain current EAS. This can easily be corrected by a $6.6 million supplemental appropriation.

Fifth, it is my hope that Congress will soon begin a legislative effort to obtain the necessary funding. But given the time it will take to organize the new Congress and begin the legislative process, there is no way that a supplemental appropriation can be passed before the March 1 deadline when the service cuts will take effect under the DOT proposal.

Therefore, it is absolutely essential that DOT not implement the proposed cuts and that it give the legislative process time to solve the problem.

Sixth, to do otherwise would be very damaging to the 30 to 50 communities that would lose air service under the DOT proposal. Once that air service is gone, it will be very difficult to get it back and redevelop the market. The best approach is to maintain the service at current levels and await the supplemental, even though there is a risk of greater cuts later if the legislative effort fails.

In sum, my resolution calls on the Secretary of Transportation not to implement the proposed EAS reductions until Congress has a chance to appropriate supplemental funding for this program.

Seventh, I know that many of my colleagues are also adversely impacted by the EAS cuts and I invite them to join me in cosponsoring this resolution.

VERA MIOSSI—THE NATION LOSES A GREAT CITIZEN

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, Vera Miossi of San Luis Obispo County died on October 18, 1988, at the age of 97. But before she died, she set an incredible standard for citizenship to which all of us could aspire.

On the day before she died, Mrs. Miossi cast her last vote, by absentee ballot, for President of the United States. It represented the 20th consecutive Presidential election in which she had voted. From 1912, when she first voted, until 1988, she never missed a Presidential contest. I might add that she was one of the first women to vote in a Presidential election in this country.

I know my colleagues join me in expressing condolences to the family of Vera Miossi upon her death. But I am sure that her family takes pride in her record of citizenship, which also included active participation in numerous citizens' groups and, along with other family members, important contributions of property to local and State government for public purposes.

Mr. Speaker, following is the text of an article about Mrs. Miossi that appeared in the San Luis Obispo County Telegram-Tribune soon after her death. I recommend it to the attention of the Members.

[From the San Luis Obispo County (CA) Telegram-Tribune, Oct. 20, 1988]

VOTER VERA MIOSSI, 97, CASTS ONE LAST BALLOT

(By Warren Groshong)

Vera Miossi wanted in the worst way to cast her ballot Nov. 8.

After all, she had voted in every presidential election since 1912.

But at 97 and in very frail health, the San Luis Obispo County native was afraid she wouldn't last until election day.

Well, Vera Miossi got her wish.

With the help of her son and her nurse, she completed an absentee ballot Monday morning and it was filed with the county clerk.

The following afternoon, Tuesday, Oct. 18, 1988, exactly three weeks before the election, Vera Miossi died in the Miossi La-Cuesta Ranch house where she had lived for 72 years.

George Tays, county elections supervisor, said she was the voter of longest standing in the county, having voted in 20 presidential elections without a miss.

Mrs. Miossi was born Feb. 4, 1891, to pioneer Italian Swiss settlers, James and Sophia Giorgi Gnesa in Green Valley near Cambria. The property later was acquired by the Hearst family.

A homemaker most of her adult life, she was active in many farm, historical, social, community and Catholic organizations.

In 1958, she joined with her sisters in contributing 150 acres of Bishop Peak to the State Park Foundation. In the 1950s, she and her brother-in-law, Arthur Miossi, contributed acreage for a portion of Cuesta Park adjacent to their LaCuesta Ranch. Her son Harold gives this account of his mother's voting record, starting when she registered for the first time in 1912:

"That was the year California franchised women to vote, long before the ratification of the U.S. Constitution in 1920.

"She had just commenced working at the White House Grocery which was then located at the site of the present Coldwell Banker real estate office across from Mission Plaza. Because there was an initiative on the California ballot that year to restrict the sale of spirits which was a large part of the grocery's business, the management encouraged her to register to vote.

"On that same ballot was the historic election for President when the Bull Moose ticket split the Republican ranks in California by running Theodore Roosevelt and Hiram Johnson. Because Governor Johnson controlled the Republican organization, he kept Taft's name off the California ballot, with the result that Roosevelt and Johnson carried enough electoral votes to deny the election to Taft and give the White House to Woodrow Wilson."

She "often commented that she voted for Taft; if she did she would have had to write in his name.

"In 1960, enamored with President Kennedy, she changed her party affiliation to Democrat. She had warm feelings for President Dwight Eisenhower because they were born the same year, same month, but these warm feelings did not appear to extend to subsequent Republican Presidents."

Mrs. Miossi's husband, Ben E. Miossi, died in 1945. She is survived by two sons, Bernard of San Francisco and Harold of San Luis Obispo; a sister, Hilda Giacomazzi of San Luis Obispo and nieces and nephews.

A Mass of Christian burial was celebrated at 10 this morning in the Old Mission Church. Burial was to be in the Lawn Memorial Cemetery.

The family requests that contributions go to favorite charities.

WORD GAMES FOR FARMERS

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, the elimination of foreign barriers to United States agricultural imports and of domestic agricultural subsidies that distort farm trade has been the consistent objective of United States negotiators at the current round of GATT negotiations in Geneva.

The administration, the United States congressional delegation and other agricultural representatives attending the midterm review meeting in Montreal last month should all be praised for holding the line on the United States position.

Ambassador Clayton Yeutter, as the U.S. Trade Representative, has done a commendable job on behalf of agriculture, spearheading the charge for a change in the GATT rules governing agriculture. As the Secretary-designate of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, he provides continuity in pressing the U.S. position.

Future progress in the GATT negotiations, and the future for improved trade relations with our trading partners in general, hinge upon the resolution of the agricultural barrier/export subsidy issue. Failure to do so will prove foolish for the Europeans, and expensive to both the United States, the European Community, and other agricultural exporting countries.

The following is an article which recently appeared in the Economist which illustrates why it is in the best interests of the Europeans, and the United States, to reach an agreement concerning new rules governing agricultural trade at the GATT.

WORD GAMES FOR FARMERS

[From the Economist, Dec. 17, 1988]

Agriculture is the monstrous carbuncle on the fair face of free trade. For the past two years the governments of the big farming countries have solemnly promised to remove the blemish. Last week in Montreal their trade ministers got their chance—and botched it. Their talks ended in bitter deadlock between Europe and America over whether they should "eliminate" or merely "reduce" trade-distorting farm subsidies by the end of the century.

The key words in this semantic spat are "trade-distorting". The basic flaw in the agricultural policy of most OECD countries is the belief that stable and adequate incomes for farmers should be achieved by supporting farm prices and dumping excess production abroad. This technique means that consumers and taxpayers make big farmers richer while small ones still only scratch a living. Indiscriminate largesse produces such nonsenses as each American dairy cow getting $1,400 of government cash in 1986, more than the GDP per head of over half the world's population.

America cannot afford to go on spending this much to increase its surpluses. But its politicians will not put a stop to the excesses until other countries have agreed to do the same. In the distrustful world of farming negotiations, only a firm promise to eliminate price support—the "zero option"—will satisfy the Americans.

When told this goal is unrealistic, Mr. Clayton Yeutter, the American trade negotiator who will be Mr. Bush's agriculture secretary, asks "Why?". The Europeans have several unconvincing replies. The underlying reason, they say, is that the European Community has almost three times as many farmers as America, and European farms are on average less than a tenth of the size of those in America. The CAP lies at the heart of the Community. And, with 1992 looming, now is not the time for open heart surgery.

These are just excuses, and bad ones at that. A thorough revamp of European agriculture would give the Community exactly the economic boost it needs. One recent IMF study calculates that abolishing the CAP would, at the end of five years, shave 1¾% off West Germany's consumer prices and boost its employment by 5½% and real GDP by 3½%.

After last week's meetings in Montreal, there is even more at stake than forgoing such gains. The negotiators made much progress in other areas, especially towards GATT rules for trade in services. If America and Europe cannot settle their differences over the long-term aim of agricultural reform by the first week in April, this progress on services and other issues will be thrown into the bin. If this were to happen, Europe would lose at least as much as America.

HORMONE WAR

Without agreement, the prospect of a farm war between Europe and America will become reality. From January 1st Europe intends to block all imports of hormone-treated meat, which come mainly from America. The Americans promise to retaliate. Congress will start drafting a new farm bill in 1989. Unless Europe accepts the core of the zero option, the bill will prepare for an export-subsidy war.

Europe cannot afford to laugh off this threat. Though the American administration is strapped for cash, it has rarely resisted calls to support farmers. Nor can Europe afford to go on blaming American intransigence for the lack of progress on agricultural reform. Instead, it should exploit the two vital areas where America is flexible. One, the zero option does not call for the abolition of all subsidies to farmers, and hence of the European peasantry; its emphasis is on price supports that distort trade. So the EEC would be able to promise farmers that it will gradually shift its spending from price to income support. And two, the United States has relaxed its end-of-century deadline for eliminating the most offensive subsidies. Both points offer a way ahead for Europe and America to reform farm trade—and save the GATT round.

PEACE IN THE STRUGGLE

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to learn of the publication of George Lipsitz' book about one of St. Louis' outstanding black leaders, Mr. Ivory Perry.

Mr. Perry has devoted his life to the struggle for civil rights and racial equality. He is also a personal and political friend with whom I have walked many picket lines and protested many injustices. His story, "Peace in the Struggle" is a true tale of history and heroism and I commend the author for sharing it with us. Ivory Perry is an excellent role model and an inspiration for leaders, for youth, and for all black Americans.

The following description of George Lipsitz's work appeared in the St. Louis Whirl-Examiner, November 15, 1988.

[From the St. Louis Whirl-Examiner, Nov. 15, 1988]

A MAN AMONG MEN IN THE RACE FOR RACIAL JUSTICE

Using oral histories and extensive archival research, George Lipsitz tells the story of Black worker and community activist Ivory Perry and examines the culture of opposition through the events of Perry's life of commitment.

"This powerful book tells of Ivory Perry's choice of a life of protest not in splendid isolation, but in intimate conversation with our world. Perry knows and can tell us what it is to be poor and Black in America. His story assigns our task. By placing Perry's actions in the Civil Rights struggle within a theoretical context, rather than settling for anecdote. Lipsitz prepares us to confront this assignment. And Perry reminds us we had better get to it." William S. McFeely, University of Georgia.

"Lipsitz may be the first American historian of radical social protest who gives full range to the psychological complexities of the historical actors, without either scolding . . . or essentially lionizing . . . the chief protagonist. The narrative, which unravels almost like a novel, is both stirring and immensely tragic. Drawing upon historical and sociological scholarship. Lipsitz raises the insights up to a phenomenological or existential level."—Mari Jo Buhle, Brown University.

"This is a very rich history of a rank and file leader of the Black movement . . . Hopefully it will be a prototype for books that emphasize the fact that social movements put up their own leaders whose qualities of leadership are precisely the same as the values and aspirations of the members of the movement."—George Rawick, University of Missouri.

The story "Peace In The Struggle" is at all local book stores.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO MAKE RETIREMENT BENEFITS A MANDATORY SUBJECT OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which would make retirement benefits a mandatory subject of collective bargaining. The legislation would protect the rights of retirees who face rising costs of living, but who do not have the resources to meet the increased costs; 18 years ago the Supreme Court ruled in Allied Chemical and Alkali Workers of America versus Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., that retirement benefits are not, under section 8 of the National Labor Relations Act, a mandatory subject of collective bargaining. This overturned the NLRB's position on retirement benefits. My bill adopts the original position of the NLRB.

The bill would amend the National Labor Relations Act to make retirement benefits a mandatory subject of collective bargaining. Since the 1971 U.S. Supreme Court decision, millions of retirees have lost the opportunity for improved standards of living because their pension and health benefits have remained unchanged. It would restore the ability of unions to bargain about retirement benefits, thereby giving retirees a chance at improved pensions and health plans. In addition it is illegal to make unilateral changes in an area considered to be a mandatory subject of bargaining. Without this legislation, conditions affecting retired employees can be altered unilaterally by labor or management.

In many cases the retired employees helped to build the company for which they worked. To that extent, they should be able to share in the future successes of that company. I urge that this bill move beyond the hearing stage to enactment, and I hope that my colleagues will join me in this effort.

REINSTATE PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT OF CAPITAL GAINS

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, the Tax Reform Act of 1986 has nullifed the many positive actions taken since 1978 to reduce the rate of taxation for capital gains. Despite the lessons of history and the indications of recent studies, Congress has again arbitrarily raised the maximum rate from 20 to 28 percent. Not only will the increased rate discourage investment, it will also reduce the future revenues collected from the tax. A review of the history of the capital gains tax will show that a cut in the rate has always increased revenue. Recent economic studies also indicate this will be true in the future. It is evident that the revenue maximizing rate is about 15 percent so I have introduced appropriate legislation that will set the rate of taxation of capital gains at 15 percent.

Capital gains are those gains resulting from the sale of capital assets, such as stocks, bonds, and real estate. Until passage of the Tax Reform Act, long-term capital gain—long-term gain was that resulting from the sale of a capital asset held for longer than 6 months—was entitled to preferential tax treatment. In general, 60 percent of the long-term capital was excluded from tax. The highest effective tax rate on a long-term capital gain was excluded from tax. The highest effective tax rate on a long-term capital gain was, therefore, 20 percent—40 percent of the long-term gain subject to tax times the highest marginal tax rate, 50 percent.

In the early 1970's, Congress doubled the maximum tax rate on capital gains from 25 to 49 percent. The motivation for this dramatic increase was ostensibly to increase tax revenues, but these high capital gains tax rates caused those years to be some of the most unproductive in recent history in terms of capital investment and small business growth. Many businessmen and high technology innovators still refer to those years as the "dog days of the entrepreneur." The venture or risk capital needed to begin and finance the growth of new corporations virtually disappeared. A period of economic stagnation ensued, and many corporations went under, went deeply into debt, or in the case of many high technolgy companies, were forced to sell or license their products to foreign corporations.

Mr. Ed Zschau, a Congressman from the State of California who retired his seat at the end of the 99th Congress, was a young entrepreneur just starting out in Silicon Valley at this time, who somehow managed to survive this difficult period. As he related over 2 years ago to the New York Times:

In the early 1970s when my company was first getting off the ground, venture capital sources had pretty much dried up. What I did and what many other companies had to do, was seek capital from foreign companies. But in order to get the money, we had to sell licenses or technology or go into joint ventures. Unfortunately, we sold a lot of our goods off.

Something is wrong with American genius. American ingenuity and American entrepreneurial skills are being leased or sold to our foreign competitors for lack of venture capital to finance their development.

Then, in 1978, behind the leadership of the late Congressman Bill Steiger, Congress acted to reduce the capital gains tax rates from 49 to 28 percent. The results were astonishing, even to those who had proposed the reduction. Within a mere 18 months, more than $1 billion of new venture capital poured into funds for investment in new and growing companies. With a further reduction to 20 percent in 1981, the United States experienced a virtual explosion of investment and capital formation. This explosion has resulted in over 1 million new jobs since 1978, and contrary to the predictions of many, has actually increased capital gains tax revenues. In 1979, the first year of the Steiger tax cut, the Treasury Department, collected $11.7 billion in capital gains tax revenues, up from $8.1 billion collected in 1977 and $9.3 billion collected in 1978. So much for the expected decline in revenues.

Most experts agree that the Tax Reform Act of 1986 will have devastating effects on the formation of capital and will undoubtedly result in a marked capital gains tax revenue loss over the next few years. Harvard Prof. Lawrence Lindsey has simulated the revenue impact of the 1986 tax reform legislation and the proposed 15 percent rate as opposed to the past rate. For the 3 fiscal years from 1988 to 1990 the 1986 tax reform rate would result in a projected loss of $31.7 billion whereas the 15-percent rate would result in a projected gain of $14.8 billion. This is not an isolated instance; five other recent studies have indicated that the optimum capital gains rate lies between 9 and 21 percent. If the Tax Reform Act of 1986 is not amended, capital will become more expensive and our productivity, innovation and economic growth will therefore be reduced. As a result, Federal tax revenues will be diminished as proven both by economists and by history.

Furthermore, the 1986 reform will have the effect of dramatically increasing the capital gains taxation for lower- and middle-income taxpayers who were never subject to a maximum capital gains rate of 20 percent, even under the law in effect before this reform. Take, for example, a retired individual who holds stock as a portion of his security for his retirement. This individual must often sell his stock holdings to provide income on which to live. Under the law in effect prior to passage of this tax reform, however, the entire amount of the gain realized on the sale of these capital assets will be subject to taxation as ordinary income. For a person on a fixed income, struggling to make ends meet, the difference between these two amounts can be critical.

Also surprising to those who believe that a cut in capital gains tax is solely to the benefit of the wealthy are Dr. Martin Feldstein's findings on the origin of the revenue gain from the proposed 15-percent tax. Taxpayers with gross incomes of $100,000 and above would account for over 80 percent of the increased revenue and those with gross incomes of over $200,000 would account for over 50 percent. Thus, a cut in the tax will raise greater revenue from the wealthy who trade at their own convenience, while a hike in the tax will hurt the needy and the elderly who must realize their gains when they need the money.

When the rate of taxation of capital gains is cut, the wealthy willingly pay more taxes because the tax on capital gains is characterized by a voluntary nature of payment. The payment is voluntary because the asset need not be sold and the gain realized if the rate of taxation is deemed too high by the investor. A higher rate discourages the sale of capital assets in an attempt to avoid realizing the capital gain. By this mechanism the investor is locked into investments and the capital market is diminished. Because the investor chooses not to realize gains the Government receives less revenue at the higher rate. When the rate is reduced the market is stimulated and more gains are realized, yielding greater revenues from their taxation.

The fact that investors change their behavior in response to changes in the tax law requires a dynamic analysis of revenue estimates. Many of the studies cited by the opposition are static estimates that do not account for the change in behavior of the taxpayer. A dynamic analysis of the rate indicates that a cut in the rate will again raise the total revenue.

It is essential that we restore preferential capital gains treatment to a maximum rate of 15 percent. By enacting this legislation Congress can help to maintain a favorable atmosphere for economic growth and encourage sensible innovative risk taking. Capital formation cost must remain cheaper at home than abroad so we will not force entrepreneurs to seek financing abroad to develop and implement their innovations. In addition to increasing revenue through enhanced investment, the reduced rate will create more jobs and thereby also raise more revenue. This legislation puts a challenge before Congress to correct one of its great blunders of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

FASHION FOUNDATION OF AMERICA

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take cognizance of the programs of the Fashion Foundation of America, aimed to stimulate better design for better living through awards recognizing exemplary people, places, and products.

There was a need to encourage American design talent in the field of fashion at a time when the Paris label was the distinguishing factor in women's wear and the British imprint the symbol of good taste for the men's wardrobe.

While the initial recognition programs were limited to awards for American people, places and products to aid American industry, the citations now are worldwide.

One facet is the annual selection of "Best Dressed Men," originated by Charles Richman, publisher of the Brooklyn Record, who serves as the awards program coordinator.

John Tudor, prominent New York custom tailor and designer, has been serving as chairman of the Men's Division Board of the Fashion Foundation of America. A former president of the National Association of Custom Tailors and Designers of the United States and Canada, Mr. Tudor is highly respected in the industry.

Selections of best dressed men are based on budget as well as occupation with the ability to be "dressed best" for a particular endeavor. The search is continuous.

The Fashion Foundation's 47th annual list of "Best Dressed" men:

Statesman, GEORGE BUSH, President-elect.

Government, Senator LLOYD BENTSEN, Texas.

Civic Affairs, Mayor Tom Bradley, Los Angeles.

International Society, Prince Andrew, Duke of York, England.

Business, Mortimer Levitt, the Custom Shop, Shirtmakers.

Entertainment, Benny Hill, England.

Sports, D. Wayne Lucas, horse-trainer, Belmont Park, NY-Santa Anita, CA.

Communications, Maury Povich, Fox Television.

Law, Raoul Lionel Felder, New York.

Arts, Philip Johnson, architect, New Canaan, CT.

The Fashion Foundation selections have become the hallmark of distinguished dress illustrative of fashions of their time. Presidents cited will go down in fashion history and be remembered: Franklin D. Roosevelt for his cape; Dwight Eisenhower, the jacket; Harry Truman, colorful shirts; Jimmy Carter, jeans; and John F. Kennedy, three-button jacket.

Senator PATRICK MOYNIHAN's head gear influenced hats and Florida radio talk show personality, Alan Burke, favored the crew shirt.

In the "Hall of Fashion Fame," President Ronald Reagan joins Bob Hope, Cary Grant, Jackie Gleason and Fred Astaire, all noted for their eloquence.

The pioneering recognition program of the Fashion Foundation has cited among others: Samsonite luggage, Stetson hats, Alan Stuart sportswear, Renault auto, Haig and Haig Pinch bottle, and Black and White Scotch packaging, and so forth.

A survey for the "Fashion Car of the Year" and the "Fashion Foreign Car of the Year" is current and nominations are invited.

A return to the program of listing America's best dressed women on an annual basis is being considered. Coordinator Charles Richman states that the Fashion Foundation was the first to recognize Jacqueline Kennedy for her fashion leadership, citing her prior to her White House years. He also produced best dressed programs in the women's fashion field including a national CBS luncheon from the Waldor featuring Helena Rubinstein, Carmel Snow of Harper's Bazaar, Eve Symington, Jessica Dragonette, Helen Menken and Dorothy Kilgallen.

Mr. Richman coordinated a best dressed luncheon at the Pierre aired by NBC and featuring Claudette Colbert. Early on, he also coordinated programs citing Katherine Hepburn, Kitty Carlisle Hart and Lauren Bacall as fashion personalities.

The foundation believes that historians will acknowledge the importance of dress in dealings of leaders of nations. President Reagan's summit meetings with Secretary Gorbachev and later with Canada's Prime Minister Mulroney were on a firm fashion footing, all three having been cited by the Fashion Foundation of America.

An added note of the changing times, as drawn from the Fashion Foundation selections, is that earlier it was Prince Alexis Obolensky who was cited, a former Russian who came to New York. Later the Russian accent on the list was that of Secretary Gorbachev.

The Fashion Foundation of America insignia, symbolic of citation, was designed by artist David Lax, whose paintings are in musuems across the Nation. Director emeritus of the Dutchess Community College art department, he has chaired many of the foundation's selection programs. Also participating has been artist Robert Benney, noted for his collection of theatre art and military ship memorabilia, as well as illustrations.

RONALD (RANDY) CLAIR RANDOLPH RETIRES

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a truly sensational man, Mr. Ronald (Randy) Clair Randolph. I have known this man since my days in the California State Legislature, approximately 20 years. I assure you, that it is with great pleasure that I stand here today and commend Randy for his many contributions to San Bernardino County and wish him all the best for a well deserved retirement.

Ronald Clair Randolph was born in Bath, NY, August 7, 1933. After graduating from Havering High School he began an exceptionally honorable career in the U.S. Army by enlisting in December 1951. While remaining active in the Armed Forces, he married Lorraine and continued his military dedication until he was honorably discharged in February 1958. Randy's commitment to his country did not go unobserved for he received several decorations; notedly, the Korean Service Medal with two Bronze Stars, the Commendation Ribbon with medal pendant, the United Nation's Service Medal, the Presidential Unit Citation, and finally, the Purple Heart.

Soon after Randy's discharge from the military in 1958, he began his tenure with the State of California accepting a position in the Department of Corrections Division. He worked as a corrections officer until 1962 when he made the transition to police officer. Randy served in that capacity for only 1 year, for in 1963, he was promoted to deputy marshal of Los Angeles County where he continued to serve through 1970.

San Bernardino County was smart enough to embrace the opportunity of appointing Randy to their municipal court district as marshal of the municipal courts from 1970 to the present. Randy retires this year, after providing the marshal's office of San Bernardino County with over a quarter century of growth and success, labeling it one of the most progressive marshal offices in the State of California. Marshal Randolph has given unselfishly of his time and energies to the judicial system of our State. He is known by his peers and his coworkers as one who does not yield to pressure nor compromise his ideals. He will be missed by those of us who have known him and worked with him all these years.

I must say, and I think Randy would agree that the love and support of his wife, Lorraine, their three children, two grandchildren and a host of friends has helped to give him the strength and will to serve the county of San Bernardino. Thank you Mr. Speaker, for joining me here today to extend my appreciation to a remarkable man, and good friend.

A TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE C.J. McLIN

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, on December 27, 1988, the State of Ohio and our Nation mourned the loss of a dedicated leader and noted black legislator. Ohio State Representative, Clarence Josef McLin, Jr., or C.J., as he was affectionately known, passed away following a lengthy battle with cancer.

First elected to the Ohio Legislature in 1966, C.J. McLin established himself as a black leader in the State house. At the time of his death, he was also known as one of the most powerful black politicians in the State of Ohio's history. In 1967, C.J. founded the Black Elected Democrats of Ohio. Under his leadership, the organization fought discrimination in housing, education, and successfully campaigned to assure State contracts for minority business firms.

C.J. McLin was a champion of public service. His constituency benefited from his commitment to welfare reform, housing, health care, and economic development. He was a tireless advocate on behalf of Central State and Wright State Universities over the years. He investigated prison conditions in the State of Ohio and was responsible for reform legislation. He was also the major force behind the now famous National Afro-American Museum and Cultural Center in Wilberforce, OH.

Mr. Speaker, during his lifetime, C.J. McLin epitomized everything that a politician ought to stand for. He was a man of impeccable integrity, competence, and loyalty. He was also a great teacher. I have benefited greatly from his friendship, advice and counsel during my tenure in Congress. I will miss the close friendship we shared.

On behalf of the Congressional Black Caucus, we extend our deepest sympathy to C.J.'s family, his many supporters and friends.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to submit a recent editorial from the Cleveland Plain Dealer regarding C.J. McLin. I hope that my colleagues will join me in paying tribute to this great humanitarian and leader.

[From the Cleveland Plain Dealer, Jan. 4, 1989]

C.J. McLin, Jr.

Then frail and sickly, C. J. McLin Jr. smiled his patented grin at the Democratic National Committee last summer when he proudly led the Jesse Jackson contingent from Ohio. It was a long time coming for the man who had a gimpy leg because a white hospital would not treat him as an injured child, who was discriminated against when he was in the Army by being refused counter service at the PX, and who grew up in such poverty that his mother would split a candy bar three ways for her children. McLin lived long enough to become a towering civil rights leader in Ohio and the founder of the Black Elected Democrats of Ohio, McLin, 67, a Dayton Democrat, died last week after a lengthy bout with cancer.

Rep. Louis Stokes fondly recalled how McLin outslicked the Cleveland contingent at the first BEDO conference by packing the hall with black officials from a small Cincinnati suburb to outvote the big city guys from the North. McLin established himself as the black leader at the Statehouse and he stayed at the top. He made good use of that power. He helped rebuild Central State University after it was blown apart by a tornado. He was the driving force behind the establishment of an Afro-American museum in Wilberforce. He investigated prison conditions in Ohio and pushed through needed reforms. And he was the architect of the minority set—aside program for state contractors, McLin, who chomped on an ever present cigar, was a back-room politician who cut deals with senators, governors, and even presidents.

As an old-time civil rights leader, McLin ran his Dayton district in keeping with his surname—like an Irish political boss. His constituents lined up Saturday mornings in front of his funeral home for favors, jobs, recommendations and money. He bailed kids out of jail during the 1960s riots and took them home to their parents by the scruff of the neck. When those kids got older, he found them jobs with local government agencies. There's hardly a family in his district that did not owe McLin a favor—it was returned at the ballot box where he controlled an awesome bloc of votes. But his true power came from the force of his convictions. He never backed down and he never gave up.

At the convention, he was proud that he was given the opportunity to vote for a black man for president. Yet, Jesse Jackson would not have made it that far if it had not been for C.J. McLin, Louis Stokes, George Forbes and the other courageous black leaders sitting in the convention hall who built strong party organizations that supported Jackson's candidacy. C.J. McLin was a man of his turbulent times—but he made them less troublesome. To the naysayers who believe that politics does not matter, McLin proved them wrong. And for those who believe there are no more leaders, C.J. McLin was one of the best.

HUMAN RIGHTS CONFERENCE IN MOSCOW, 1991

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I have some strong reservations regarding the administration's acceptance of a Helsinki human rights conference in Moscow in 1991. I believe that the decision is premature.

As chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, I have been closely monitoring human rights developments under Soviet President Gorbachev. Clearly, the improvements in human rights in the Soviet Union over the past several years have been substantial, meaningful, and laudable. No one has been more encouraged by what has transpired in that country than I. Hundreds of political prisoners have been released. Jewish, Armenian, and ethnic German emigration is significantly higher today than it was 3 years ago. The jamming of Voice of America and of Radio Liberty/Radio Free Europe has ceased. Reforms of psychiatry and of the Criminal Code are underway. Most family reunification cases have been resolved. The press has been allowed much greater freedoms. Restrictions on speech, religion, assembly, and association have been significantly relaxed. Intellectual and cultural expression is much more diverse. Less state control of the economy and some steps toward more public involvement in the political process has been achieved and is continuing. Heavy handed tactics against dissidents are not used as in the past.

President Gorbachev deserves credit for many of these positive changes. However, President Reagan and the Congress have continued to place human rights at the top of United States-Soviet bilateral relations.

Unfortunately, I remain deeply concerned that the human rights reforms have not been institutionalized, are arbitrary, and could be rescinded depending on the vicissitudes of Soviet politics. I also believe they do not go far enough to justify holding a human rights conference in Moscow.

In free societies, freedoms and liberties are guaranteed by law and protected by an independent judicial system. Due process protects defendants against Government unfairness. Pluralism ensures that various sectors of society are engaged in the political process.

I am not convinced, at this point, that the Soviet Criminal Code is sufficiently reformed, that the Soviet judicial system guarantees fair trials, that due process is fully respected, or that those outside the Communist Party, espousing views at variance with President Gorbachev, are not subject to Government action. The KGB has not been reformed and can still engage in excesses, impinging on the rights of Soviet citizens. The checks on the power of the Government and the party are tenuous.

The subcommittee continues to receive reports of some troubling developments. Various regional officials have apparently interpreted the reforms differently. Some individuals participating in a protest in Lviv, Ukraine, were subject to criminal action. Ukrainian dissident Ivan Makar was imprisoned this summer, and activist Sergei Grigoryants faced arrest and other forms of harassment. Armenian activist Arykian was expelled. Individuals who want to assemble and protest, face many obstacles. Organizations and associations independent of the party are not accepted and may be subject to criminal action. Government regulation of religion still exists.

In short, we simple do not know how long lived Gorbachev's reforms will be, or whether they will precipitate further improvements. I believe it is premature to agree to a human rights conference in Moscow at this point, regardless of how it may strengthen Gorbachev's efforts toward greater reforms. I would rather wait a little longer before committing to a conference. Too many questions remain.

THE ELDERLY HOME CARE TAX CREDIT ACT OF 1989

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation which provides a tax credit for individuals who care for elderly relatives, or those with Alzheimer's disease, in their homes.

This legislation amends the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to create a new tax credit modeled after the dependent care tax credit under present law. The credit would generally equal 30 percent of qualified elderly care expenses. The percentage amount would be reduced as the taxpayer's income increased from $25,000 to $75,000 at which point the credit would completely phase out.

Examples of qualified expenses include home health agency services, homemaker services, adult day care, respite care, or health care equipment and supplies. Expenses for these purposes, made on behalf of family members who are over 70 years of age, are diagnosed as having Alzheimer's disease or are disabled, are eligible for the tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my bill is to encourage families, if possible, to care for elderly relatives in the home while also recognizing the devastating expenses incurred by those families who must care for a relative with Alzheimer's disease. I believe the "Elderly Home Care Tax Credit Act" of 1989 provides much needed relief to those families willing and able to care for a elderly family member in their homes. I would encourage my colleagues to cosponsor this legislation.

THE ACCUMULATED EARNINGS TAX

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a bill that would bring a sense of fairness and understanding to the Tax Code. Internal Revenue Code section 532(c), added by Congress in 1984, made the accumulated earnings tax applicable, for the first time, to widely held corporations. The legislative history shows that 532(c) was a reasonable congressional response to the formation of investment corporations which were formed for no true business purpose, but were simply a device to take advantage of the difference between the capital gains tax rate and the dividend tax rate. The investment corporations used their capital to purchase dividend paying stocks of other corporations. The investment corporation, receiving a dividend, was subject only to the nominal tax on the dividend, an effective rate of 6.9 percent, and instead of paying these dividends to its shareholders, it accumulated the dividends. The investment corporation's policy was to never pay dividends and accordingly, its shares increased in value roughly equal to its dividend income.

Shareholders thus paid no taxes on dividends of the underlying stocks held by the investment corporation but could realize income equivalent to the dividend accumulation by selling their shares. The gain on the sale of those shares was taxable as capital gains—20 percent—rather than ordinary dividend income—as high as 50 percent. The congressional response to this tax avoidance scheme was the passage of IRC section 532(c) which, for the first time, applied the accumulated earnings tax to widely held corporations. The potential levy of the accumulated earnings penalty rate made the investment corporation an uneconomical means of avoiding taxation and effectively ended these companies, thereby insuring that dividend income would be taxed at the shareholders level of ordinary income rates.

Under the Tax Reform Act of 1986, capital gains would be taxed at the same rate as dividend income. Accordingly, the act also insures that the investment corporation device, which converts dividend income into capital gains income, is uneconomical. The Tax Reform Act insures that dividend income will be taxed at ordinary rates, for there will no longer be a difference between capital gains and dividend rates. Under these circumstances, section 532(c) should be repealed.

The continued application of 532(c) is not good public policy in the events of applying the accumulated earnings tax to widely held corporations. In a widely held corporation, the payment of a dividend or the accumulation of funds for expansion, investment, or research and development is a decision best left to a board of directors. As a result of the applicability of the accumulated earnings tax to widely held corporations, there may be a tendency for corporations to pay dividends, even when the corporate resources should be husbanded for important future business expenditures.

The ability of the Internal Revenue Service to second guess the directors by applying the accumulated earnings tax to a widely held corporation should not be the driving force behind a decision regarding dividend policy. Rather, the checks and balances of the marketplace should be allowed to have their natural and free effect on a widely held corporation's board of directors. As such widely held corporations are, by definition, publicly held by many shareholders, it is in the interest of the board to make dividend decisions based on the marketplace and the corporation's business needs. The repeal of section 532(c) will allow corporate directors to determine dividend policy without reference to an unnecessary and punitive application of the accumulated earnings tax.

EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM THREATENED BY BUDGET CUTS

HON. DAVID E. PRICE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 4, 1989

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, our country has reached a critical point in its history, a point which will determine whether or not we continue our tradition of greatness, of economic success and of unparalleled opportunity. Throughout the years, the cornerstone of American greatness has been our educational system. Unfortunately, the strength of this system has been threatened by short-sighted budget cuts over the past 8 years.
